World Bank exdirector lauds TASAF initiative

He commended WB and other development partners who have continued to extend their support for the implementation of various poverty alleviation projects through Tasaf

By Getrude Mbago

OUTGOING World Bank Country Director Bella Bird yesterday advised the government to sustain and invest more in poverty eradication initiatives that impact lives of needy groups for the country is to achieve its various development goals.

Speaking in Dar es Salaam yesterday at a farewell ceremony, Bird pointed at the Tanzania Social Action Fund (TASAF) as one among initiatives that have played a major role in bringing down the level of abject poverty, and hence ought to pioneer programme across Africa in ending poverty, the director asserted.

A good number of countries are implementing the same project but TASAF shows the best and

"I wanted to say a few things about TASAF just as I leave Tanzania. I have been here for four years and seven months and I must say that when I first came and looked at our portfolio, I looked for the very impressive projects there. But what struck me about TASAF is that it is a powerful instrument to meet the poorest and most vulnerable people in the country," she stated.

A recent assessment conducted by the World Bank and the National Bureau of Statistics (NBS) found that TASAF has contributed immensely to poverty reduction in the country, she elaborated.

Terror paralyses schools as teachers flee attacks

NAIROBI

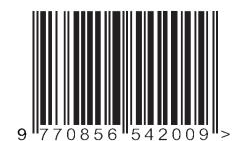

KENYA's northern zone is on the cusp of yet another education crisis as teachers begin fleeing amid fears of increasing Al Shabaab attacks.

This is despite assurances by government agencies that say they have headteachers and a few tutors. enhanced security in areas considered to be terror hotspots.

The Al-Qaeda linked group has stepped up attacks in counties bordering Somalia since December.

In the last five weeks alone, the Somaliabased ragtag militia has carried out more than 10 attacks in both the northern and coastal regions that left at least 25 people dead.

The situation mirrors the 2018 mass exodus that saw hundreds of teachers children's future. It will really be bad leave Wajir County following an attack on Qarsa Primary School when insurgents murdered three people including two

A section of teachers from Garissa and Mandera were also transferred. At least 250 schools were forced to close due to lack of teachers while those that remained open were run by

In a region that mostly depends on teachers from other parts of the country, another exit could spell doom for families with school-going children who are now staring at a bleak future.

Hussein Ali, a resident of Wajir who is also a parent to six school-going children, told a leading newspaper that another transfer of teachers from the region will be catastrophic.

"I am really worried about my for us parents if our teachers leave again this time around, "he said.

A similar scene was also witnessed in 2014 when Al Shabaab militants ambushed a Nairobi-bound bus in Mandera killing 28 passengers. Most of the victims were teachers.

Since then, while significant progress has been made, counties in the north still lag behind others in terms of education. This has been widely blamed on lack of adequate

Namibia trade tops list on ex-spymaster's new tasks

By Guardian Reporter

FORMER Director General of the Tanzania Intelligence and Security Service (TISS) Dr Modestus Kipilimba was yesterday sworn in as Tanzania's High Commissioner to Namibia and tasked to improve trade between the two countries.

Dr Kipilimba was relieved of his intelligence duties mid-September last year by President John Magufuli and later appointed ambassador, before being assigned a duty station.

He was sworn in at State House Dar es Salaam by President John Magufuli to represent Tanzania at the new embassy in Windhoek. He now has his job cut out for him considering the fact that the Head of State has high expectations on the new mission especially in the area of trade relations.

Speaking during his state visit to Namibia last May President Magufuli pledged that Tanzania would open an embassy in Windhoek to facilitate diplomatic and

The Head of State was displeased to note that despite the historic brotherly relations, trade volume between Dar es Salaam and Windhoek stood at a mere USD25,000 million (about 59bn/-)

He also instructed that the Joint Permanent Commission (JPC) for Tanzania and Namibia meet and explore areas of enhancing cooperation between the two countries.

TANESCO cautions negligent workers

TANESCO Managing Director Dr Tito Mwinuka has said he will not tolerate negligent workers in the national power company and their days are numbered.

He gave the warning when closing six-day training for 958 new workers recently employed.

The workers are continuing with their induction seminar as trainees from the Public Service College at three centres - Dodoma, Morogoro, and Mtwara. Dr Mwinuka (pictured) said Tanesco is an institution that is depended for the country's economic growth especially as the nation strives to attain a middle income industrial economy, "hence we cannot afford it when some are running while others are walking or sitting down." He told the new workers that the government depends on them as they have come in to increase the pace to attain goals in generating 10,000 MW of power by 2025.

"The government has great hopes on you. You have come to an area that is more closely watched, hence you must understand what the government expects from you so as not to let down the company," the chief executive declared.

Dr Emmanuel Shindika, principal of the Public Service College said training public servants aims at improving administrative systems comprehension among new workers.

Public service is a moral good for a person to serve other members of society but failing to adhere to work ethics at all times is a drawback, even shameful. He called upon the new workers

Dr Kalemani directs all workers in Rufiji power project to live at site

By Guardian Correpondent, Morogoro

ENERGY Minister Dr Medard Kalemani has called upon contractors and engineers of the ongoing Julius Nyerere Hydro Power Project (JNHPP) on Rufiji River to go and live in the project site starting January 13, 2020 after the completion of staff houses.

He has also directed Tanzania electric Supply Company (Tanesco) workers and those from special unit of consultant engineers (TECU) to also move to the site next month after the completion of their quarters.

Dr Kalemani gave the directives at the weekend during his tenth inspection visit of the project since its start to evaluate work progress.

He said as from now there won't be quarters are ready.

"We don't like to see contractors' workers live in Dar es Salaam while the work is undertaken in Rufiji, so from tomorrow (January 13) all workers should move to the project's site while Tanesco and TECU workers should move next month," he said.

He said already 8 housing blocks are ready with a capacity to house 192 workers, as the main aim is to have more than 400 workers living in the project area.

In his visit Dr Kalemani has directed the project's contractor to start transporting nine turbines and accessories thereof to the project area as had been agreed in the contract

He also called upon Tanesco and any excuse for contractors' workers to TECU staff to be patriotic in the live far from the project area as their verification of the quality of installed these arrive in time as per contract agreement.

He also stressed his earlier directives that forbade foreign workers being employed in jobs that can be done by Tanzanians including labourers, security guards, catering services and the like and added that whoever will go against the directives will be dealt with according to the contract agreement.

"We like to see security guards from SUMA-JKT or from TANAPA to man the gates, and if a foreigner is found steps should be taken immediately, and I ask the Region's Security and Defense Committee to oversee this," Kalemani stressed.

Speaking about clearing of the project area he gave two months to Tanzania Forest Services Agency (TFS), plants and machinery and that Tanesco, TECU and others concerned in clearing work of the project area's 914 square kms to speed up as so far this has not been done.

> He also directed TFS to employ people with experienced and great ability for the job with great speed, but also advised to consult JKT for that.

> In the visit Dr Kalemani inspected the dam site, bridges, stone-crushing and cement mixing plants and the area that would installed with the nine turbines.

> In the project's implementation the contractor was paid 1.5tr/- as initial payment.

> Earlier while on his way to the project site Dr Kalemani spoke with residents of Kisaki village and promised them to deal with their complaints over the procedure for their youths to be employed.

"One of the most striking findings of the assessment was when we looked at the decline in poverty in Tanzania and we found that if TASAF had not been there, the rate of poverty in Tanzania would be at least 2 percent higher...This is the kind of independent assessments or validations that show how impactful is the work that Tasaf is doing," she further noted.

"I remember that former President Benjamin Mkapa was inspired by the social action programme in Malawi (MASAF), but now Malawi is looking to learn from progress that Tanzania is making through TASAF," she told the gathering.

In his remarks, TASAF executive Ladislaus Mwamanga director commended the outgoing director for the huge contribution she has made to ensure that vulnerable Tanzanians improve their lives.

"You have been so good to us. You were ready to provide technical and lobby for financial support from other development partners so as to ensure that the programme is sustainable. We really appreciate your contribution and we wish you good luck in your new position," he said.

He commended the bank and other development partners who have continued to extend support for the implementation of various poverty alleviation projects through Tasaf.

The implementation of the forthcoming second phase of the TASAF-III programme set to be launched soon will focus on providing poor households with prerequisite entrepreneurship skills and how to use income-earning opportunities to set up small-scale commercial ventures, he said.

Beyond training them on acquiring entrepreneurship skills, programme will avail the beneficiaries with a roadmap to support them manage and expand their businesses, he stated.

Michele Zini, the task team leader of the WB PSSN II expressed the bank's commitment to continue supporting the TASAF programme.

"We are so proud of Tasaf. We have witnessed a number of vulnerable families who were not even sure of getting a meal are now living a better life while engaging in some economic activities...We will continue collaborate to fight poverty in the country," he added.

Mbeya-Lupa Tingatinga road now open

By Guardian Correspondent, Chunya

ROAD communication between Mbeya city and Lupa Tingatinga in Chunya District has been restored following completion of repairs to River Lupa bridge that had collapsed due to heavy floods in the area forcing the Mbeya regional commissioner Albert Chalamila to temporarily close the bridge on December 25 last year.

Before the closure of the bridge several people including a motorcyclist drowned while trying to cross the river.

Closure of the bridge caused huge transport problems for people travelling between Mbeya City and Lupa Tingatinga as vehicles were forced to make a detour through Songwe Region.

Tanzanite-One promises to settle accumulated employees' salaries and arrears in 2020 - official

By Correspondent Marc Nkwame, Arusha Gonga an Arusha-based Businessman,

THE giant mining firm of Mirerani, the Tanzanite-One Limited has promised to pay all accumulated salaries and arrears to the workers who have been going without wages for years now after the company suspended its operations.

One of the company directors Faisal Shahbhat told journalists here that for starters they have given their employees their last December payments but in reality they were working to ensure that all past salaries are settled before the Tanzanite Gemstones' mining giant open shop.

It has been realized that some 40 million/- was cashed out to 70 workers, but according to the Company Secretary, Advocate Kisaka Mnzava, the beneficiaries account for just a few workers that are still hanging around the premises. "Security personnel, cleaners and kitchen help are the ones who got paid because they happen to be still in the mining area attending to small chores, the company used to have 700 employees, which means only 10 percent of those have remained at the mining premises," he added.

Aboubakar Lombe is the Head of Security at Tanzanite One quarries; "The money paid is nothing compared to what we demand; many employees are facing serious debts and family problems due to delayed salaries," he complained.

On his part, Elisamehe Msuya another worker at Tanzanite-One said there is some hope in getting their pay, now that the company has started to send them some 'morsels'

Speaking at different times in Arusha, other employees of Tanzanite-One Limited, which is a joint venture firm with the State Mining Company (STAMICO), expressed concerns that they have been living in a financial crisis following frozen salaries, as the entity faced series of problems regarding mining operations in the Mirerani Hills of Simanjiro.

Five years ago in 2014. Mr Hussein District.

together with his partner Mr Faisal Shahbhat acquired 50 percent stake previously owned by Richland Resources Limited of UK which used to run the giant mining firm in a joint-venture with the State Mining Company (STAMICO).

Richland Resources (UK) Limited through its CEO Benard Olivier had announced its move to sell off its shares in the Tanzanite-One Mining Limited to the Sky Associated Group Limited a firm owned by Mr Gonga, Mr Shahbhat and a third partner identified as Mr Ridhiwan Ullah.

Hussein Gonga, previously owned three other mining firms; Capricorn Minerals, Prima Gemstones (T) Limited, Hugo Gems as well as Hugo Investments, while his partner, Mr Faisal Shahbhat was behind the Maruti Green Gems and Tanzanite Forever (Limited).

The two Tanzanians struck deal with Ridhiwan Ulla an Asian who is the name behind the International Gemstone Dealers Africa and Success Gems Limited of Hong-Kong.

Sky Associate Group (SAG) Limited inherited all assets, stock and liabilities estimated at 32 billion/- from Richland Resources and the new company has settled TML debts.

Following a comprehensive review of the strategic options available Richland Resources (UK), the gemstone producer and developer, through Broker RFC Ambrian, jettisoned its tanzanite mining and exploration in Mirerani (Manyara) and cutting and beneficiation operations in Arusha City as well as its license interests in Tanzania to focus on its Australian assets. The TML, formerly known as African Gemstone (AFGEM) and Mirerani Mining Limited (MML) before that, is a consortium entrusted by State Mining Company (STAMICO) which is a government institution and Tanzanite One Limited (a company owned by Richland Resources) to run the mining areas in Mirerani Hills of Simanjiro

Mpina orders removal of seized fishing vessel from Mtwara port

By Guardian Reporter, Mtwara

THE Minister for Livestock and Fisheries, Luhaga Mpina has directed the owner of the fishing trawler 'Buah Naga 1' that was seized for illegal fishing in national waters of the Indian Ocean to immediately move it from Mtwara Port to give room for other activities at the port as the court had already given its ruling on the matter.

Speaking immediately after he visited the ship owned by a Malaysian national, Mpina said the seizure of the government is serious in protecting its resources including those in the sea,.

He said the fishing trawler was the second to be seized in the Indian Ocean whereas in 2009 another trawler 'Tawariq 1' was seized by the then Minister for Livestock Development and Fisheries Dr John Magufuli as it was conducting illegal fishing in Tanzania

He said after Dr Magufuli seized

'Waste sites pose health hazards'

By Correspondent Gerald Kitabu, Kilosa

Parakuyo village, Kilosa district in Morogoro region have complained that the waste water sites at Ngoisani is polluting air, sources of water and the environment at large as a result had posed health hazards.

They said mismanagement of the open sites which contains faeces from mobile toilets produce foul smell that have turned annoyance to both residents and other people who cross over the site for their daily activities.

Speaking to the Guardian over the weekend, the Ngoisani hamlet chairman Kokani Steti said that the waste water disposal sites which are used by SGR workers have flooded, causing dangerous and risk for their health and cattle.

"Communities around this area are not safe anymore. Some cattle such as cows are suffering from scald, some pastoralists have their skin peel off and at times because the cow drink contaminated waste water, the milk produced from the cows have also been affected," they said.

He said that the residents were not involved during planning and using the site adding that if they could seek their advice, they would have advised them to re-allocate the waste water disposal site to another area far from

Parakuyo hamlet chairman said when the heavy rainfall come, normally the waste water disposal site floods Mkata river which flows into Wami river saying it is very dangerous for the lives of the downstream users.

Sought for comments Morogoro Regional Environmental Advisor Venance Soza said that it was the new information, promising to find solution to the problem as soon as possible.

He said that the region has been trying its best to make sure that the SGR works are conducted smoothly while observing the environment as per the environmental management plan.

"This is a new information that you are telling me. We need to find solution. We have received other complaints from the residents living along the SGR such as noise and dust caused by crushing stones.

Contacted for comments, Morogoro regional Commissioner Loata Sanare directed the regional medical officer and the regional environmental department to make sure that they go to the waste water disposal site and solve the problem. "I am meeting them soon (SGR staff), I will talk to them but also I will visit the site this next week (this week) and see how we can address this matter," he said.

Many people now report incidences of gender, child abuse - Z'bar police chief

By Guardian Reporter, Zanzibar

ZANZIBAR'S Commissioner of Police Mohamed Hassan Haji has said the technological advances and use of social networks has contributed to the decrease of incidences of gender and child abuse in the Isles.

Speaking to reporters at the weekend, he said in 2019 such incidents had substantially decline due to many people becoming aware of their adverse effects.

He said after the wananchi became well conversant on the matter, they have been reporting them whenever they see them happen - including rape, sodomy and child abuse.

reported in 2029 compared to 786 in the Zanzibar joint programme 2028.

The Police Commissioner said 787 suspects of the crimes were arrested in 2029 some of which case files pending in courts, while others were still with the Director of Public Prosecutions and some were still under investigations.

He explained that other reason that 2021.

contributes to the commissioning of the offences is social decay, lack of adequate education on the adverse effects of their acts as well as beliefs in superstition.

He said the police will continue to fight the vice and to ensure all perpetrators are brought to justice.

He said one of huge tasks facing the police is completion of investigations as quick as possible for the criminals to appear in court.

In 2018, a total of 942 GBV cases were reported to the Police Gender and Children's Desks in Zanzibar, a slight decrease from the 1,041 cases reported in 2017.

Ending violence against women He said a total of 826 incidents were and children is a critical pillar of that was launched in August 2018 a development collaboration between the United Nations and the Revolutionary Government of Zanzibar. The programme will be implemented in Unguja and Pemba (main islands of the Zanzibar Archipelago) from 2018-

Minister promises to sustain impromptu visits to industries to save environment

By Guardian Correspondent, Mukuranga

IMPROMPTU visits to establishments, especially industries, will be a permanent feature on the calendar of activities of the environment ministry to ensure all establishments adhere to the Environment Management Act 2004 and its Regulations, Minister of State in the Vice-President's Office (Union and Environment) George Simbachawene, promised here.

Speaking at the premises of Kisemvule-based Fujian Hexingwang metal industries, Mkurunga district, Simbachawene said surprise visits to industries will be sustained because, he said, experience showed that some industry owners established industries without exhausting the environment impact assessment procedure and those who met conditions were currently violating the law. He thanked investors respecting the law, but said discrepancies would not go unpunished.

"I promise to sustain surprise visits countrywide for a simple clear reason: to ensure industries that are established do not harm environment or inconvenience host communities. We welcome and encourage establishment the health of the people.

of new industries because that is our national goal. However, establishment of industries must be in line with EMA 2004 and its Regulations," the minster emphasised.

The minister visited the Fujian industry without notice following complaints of the people in the area that owners of the plant were not complying with the law. At the end of his visit, the minister slapped a onemonth ban on production until owners meet all environment protection details to the satisfaction of the National Environmental Management Council (NEMC). NEMC is Tanzania's environment protection watchdog.

He said the ministry and NEMC will keep a watch on all establishments and violators of the law would be punished, he warned, explaining that the most recurrent violations include poor physical infrastructure/ air pollution and releasing untreated waste into environment.

Simbachawene said the government was serious about having new industries and improving existing ones but emphasised that industries would not be started or run at the cost of environment or to the detriment of

CALL FOR SUBMISSION OF PROPOSALS TO CONDUCT FINAL PROGRAM EVALUATION THE LAND TENURE SUPPORT PROGRAM-CIVIL SOCIETY ORGANISATIONS (LTSP-CSOs)

TALA Background

Tanzania Land Alliance (TALA) is a non-profit and non-partisan organization registered as a Non-Government Organisation under the NGOs Act of 2002 which was amended in 2019. It is a coalition of 14 Civil Society Organizations founded in 2010 aiming to undertake joint advocacy activities to spearhead the attainment of land rights for marginalized rural based and peri-urban communities (especially peasants, pastoralists, artisan miners, and hunter-gatherers) in Tanzania. TALA's vision is an empowered Tanzanian society where all citizens and communities have secure and equitable access, use, control and ownership over land, benefiting lives, cultures and future generations. The mission of the organization is to enhance equitable access to, control and ownership over land through coordination, joint advocacy, and sharing of knowledge and information.

Program Overview

TALA implemented the Civil Society Organizations component of theLand Tenure Support Program (LTSP-CSOs). The main component was implemented by the Ministry of Lands, Housing and Human Settlements Development through a dedicated Programme Implementation Unit (PIU). The three development partners supported the program. These are the Governments of Sweden, United Kingdom and Denmark through their respective Embassies and Agencies in Dar es Salaam. It was being implemented in Morogoro region in three districts namely: Ulanga, Malinyi and Kilombero. The LTSP was prepared under the G8-Tanzania Land Transparency Partnership and detailed in the Programme Document, dated 4th February, 2014 prepared by

The LTSP-CSOs project was implemented at both the national and grassroot level. At the national level, the project sought policy change at the political level through supporting the formation of a CSOs platform under the coordination of TALA to participate in discussions and deliberations of land policy and legal change issues through the MSG, monitor the government progress in responding to CSOs policy change proposals, deepening CSOs engagement with media and public communications, strengthen research and analysis that enable CSOs engagement in policy dialogues, and support strategic litigation. At the grassroots level, the project empowered citizens and community members on land rights through trainings, technical backstopping, legal aid services, awareness creation and land dispute settlement mechanisms. This was done by coordinating both TALA members and local based CSOs to actively engage in increasing awareness and knowledge to village and ward land administration organs such as VC, VLC, VAC, VNRC and WT, provide legal aid services to marginalized groups such as women, youth, and pastoralists, and enhance land conflict resolution mechanisms. The project direct beneficiaries are: small scale farmers, pastoralists, members of Village Land Councils and Ward Tribunals, members of Village Councils, women, youth, disabled and other gender groups, villagers and community members. Other project beneficiaries are the local based CSOs, TALA members, and non-TALA members, the Local Government Authorities in the three districts, and the Ministry of Land Housing and Human Settlement Development. Project Goal

To enhance transparent, accountable and equitable land governance and effective land administration systems.

Objectives

The Project strives to attain the following objectives:

- To build the capacity of land and natural resources organizations to have common voice and effectively engage in advocacy for land and natural resources rights for marginalized
- Mobilize members to jointly engage with government to advocate for policies and law reforms in favour of marginalized communities;
- Engage mass media for documentation, information sharing, publication and project visibility.

Outcome

- Citizens and communities better able to secure and defend legitimate land rights; Institutions, systems and processes of land governance strengthened;
- Outputs
- Greater government and private sector organizations (PSOs) responsiveness to CSOs
- proposals; Citizens and communities better informed and supported on their legitimate land rights Strong village land governance institutions enhanced;
- Capacities of media, and civil society, including women and pastoral communities to play roles in land administration strengthened

Evaluation Criteria and Evaluation Questions

The evaluation will use the overall OECD/DAC evaluation criteria of relevance, efficiency, effectiveness, impact and sustainability as an overall reference for the evaluation. Further to this, some initial idea of questions around the evaluation's criteria are included in the next sections.

Audience of the Evaluation Findings

The primary audiences for the evaluation are DANIDA, DFID, SIDA, and TALA Secretariat, Thematic groups which are basically TALA Members, Non-TALA Members, and local CSOs. Other useful information will be shared to relevant partners for learning purpose.

Evaluation Scope and Key Learning Questions

- i. The extent to which the project has improved the capacity and awareness of community members, women, youth and social accountability monitoring (SAM) teams to secure, defend and protect their legimate land rightsfor their livelihood:
- The extent to which the project has increased the capacities of land dispute settlement organs such as Village Land Councils, Ward Tribunals and the District Land and Housing Tribunals in resolving land disputes thereby leading to decrease in land conflicts among different land users.
- The extent to which community members from marginalized groups like women and pastoralists have been empowered to fights for their land rights;
- Evaluate contribution of the project to strengthen partnership between government and CSOs in advocating for pro-people policy and legal reforms through the Multistakeholder Group Sessions (MSG),
- Evaluate effectiveness of TALA's thematic working groups' mode of operation in terms of cost and community diversity reached during project implementation.

Key Learning Questions (gender should be considered as a dimension in answering the following key learning questions):

Relevance

- To what extent is the LTSP-CSO project relevant to the bigger LTSP designed project which was being implemented by the Ministry of Lands Housing and Human Settlement
- What are the linkages and non-linkages between the LTSP-CSOs component and the LTSP-government component in addressing land tenure insecurity for community
- To what extent is the LTSP-CSO project appropriate and responsive to the needs of citizens in Ulanga, Malinyi and Kilombero districts?
- iv. Does the approach used responds to the needs of community members in enhancing their capacities of realizing their land rights?
- Which population segments are being effectively reached by this project? Which, if any, are being left out of the project as a whole, or failing to reach the accompaniment stage?

Efficiency

- What are the strengths and challenges associated with the LTSP-CSOs projects?
- How does the project become efficient compared to other similar types of projects in Ulanga,
- iii. To what extent has the project fostered coordination with other development partners and stakeholders in the project districts such as paralegals, local CSOs, LGAs and integration with community members?

Effectiveness

- To what extent has the project attained its awareness creation and training objectives? How the MSG platform enabled the CSOs to advocate and influence pro-people policy and
- How has the project facilitated the reduction of long and short term land conflicts in the project districts?

iv. What do you consider to be the roles of TALA thematic groups in reaching marginalized group and wider diversity of community members in the program areas?

Anticipated/ Early indications of Impact

- What impact positive or negative, direct or indirect, intended or unintended has the program produced to citizens?
- Recognizing that the impacts of the program interventions are often long-term in nature, to what extent is the project positioned to generate meaningful change in the future?
- What indicators are currently being tracked that might be used to project and track longer-term change? To what extent has participation in the program empowered men and women in terms of their
- perceptions of women land rights land tenure security for women in Ulanga, Malinyi and
- To what extent do the formation and training of Social Accountability Monitoring Teams (SAM Teams) helped to improve land governance and administration at the village level.

Sustainability

- Are the benefits of the programmatic activities in Ulanga, Malinyi and Kilombero districts likely to continue into the long-term?
- How do the paralegals, Local CSOs, and LGAs trained and fully engaged in the project likely to sustain the project?
- To what extent will the SAM teams established at village level be operationally sustainable after the project concludes? What systems, if any, have been put in place to ensure the long-term viability of the teams?

Evaluation Approach

We seek the most robust evaluation approach that is appropriate for the scope of the project, resources, and audience. Evidence gathered will likely be from both primary (interviews, focus groups, etc.) and secondary (project documents, records, baseline and midterm data, etc.) sources using qualitative and quantitative data. We are particularly interested in approaches that meaningfully engage women and men of all levels in the evaluation process and propose approaches for elevating women voices.

As part of the data collection, the evaluation team should consider meeting with:

- Villagers Government Leaders (VEOs and Village Chairpersons)
- Members of Village Councils; Members of Village Land Councils;
- SAM team members;
- Local Government Authority Officials particularly DEDs, DCOs, and DLOs; LTSP-Project Team from the Project Implementation Unit of the MLHHSD;
- The Ministry of Land Housing and Human Settlement Development;
- viii. Danish International Development Agency (DANIDA);
- TALA Staff,

Activity

- TALA Members through thematic group leaders and focal persons;
- Local CSOs and Paralegals from the three districts; Non-TALA members such as Care International, PELUM Tanzania, Landesa, Oxfam, DAI

PCCB rescues 217.4m/erroneously paid out by AMCOS officials

By Guardian Correspondent, Kibaha

THE Prevention and Combating of Corruption Bureau (PCCB) in Coast Region has succeeded to rescue and return 217,481,498/- that was erroneously paid out by some officials of Agricultural Marketing Cooperative Societies (AMCOS) and other crops Boards.

Presenting PCCB report covering three months to reporters here, the Acting PCCB Head for Coast Region Sadiki Nombo said the money has been returned in Mkuranga, Kibiti, Rufiji and Kisarawe districts.

Nombo said out of the amount rescued only 67,908,958/was paid to the right farmers in Kibiti district.

He said 16,275,000/- was paid to farmers in Rufiji district making a total of 84,183,958/- that was returned to farmers that were short-paid.

He said the plot used in the embezzlement include paying some farmers twice for one consignment of cashew nuts

"But there were also some farmers who took their crops to primary cooperatives but were not paid as their names were missing in the documentation to show their crops had been received," he added.

He said in the three months period 13 development projects valued at 2,537,912,252/30 were inspected whereas three were found to have deficiencies in their accounts and investigations were initiated thereon.

He said in some projects, the deficiencies include transfer of funds to other projects without following proper procedures, while others showed very high cost of implementation compared to the actual work done.

"In Mafia District there is an external toilet built at the District's State House at a cost of 32m/-but when you examine it you will discover the actual money spent," Nombo said.

He said it is PCCB's responsibility to ensure the country's development projects are beneficial and bring intended

Mafia authorities strategise means to improve SMEs welfare

By Beatrice Philemon

AUTHORITIES in Mafia are working on possibilities to create an enabling environment for small and medium entrepreneurs (SMEs) engaged in handcraft making, food processing sub-sector and organic cosmetics manufacturing so that they can benefit from their economic ventures.

Mafia District Commissioner Shaib Nnunduma says the main goal was to assist them to market and sell their products to tourists and other visitors who visit in Mafia to see the tourist's attractions.

"Right now we invite SMEs engaged in those sectors to come in our office so that we can discuss together and find special area that will be suitable for them to market what they have to tourists and other people," he noted. He says, they don't want to allocate special area for them without involving them, because they can allocate an area that is not good for them and later on fail to market and benefit from what they have.

"Let us allow them to select the best area they need and as a district management we will allocate it for them to allow them benefit from the products they have," he noted. Apart from that through this programme it will be easy for them to be recognized by the district for what they did socially and economically, benefit from loan services and training offered for SMEs and get an opportunity to attend different trade fairs across the country. The majority of SMEs in Mafia fail to secure markets for what they have because they don't come in our office to say what they need from the district, they just do their businesses as they wish. For her part, Husuni Makunga a woman entrepreneur producing cosmetics products in Mafia added that through the knowledge gained from ActionAid Tanzania so far women have already made traditional accessories products, handcrafts, organic coconut value added products including coconut oil, lotion and other cosmetics including seaweed products that sell it within mafia district due to lack of According to her, women entrepreneurs in Mafia have failed to exploit the lucrative market in Dar es Salaam market because of transport and logistics.

Makunga also said because of the poor capacity of the dhows and wooden boats, business women are sometimes stranded on high seas with broken down vessels which endangers their lives while damage their property.

"Although ActionAid Tanzania has trained us on entrepreneurship skills and how to produce high quality products free of charge, we are yet to benefit from the skills acquired because much of our earnings are directed to pay transport and district council taxes," she noted while revealing that most of the vessels are aged and dilapidated.

"Travelling between Mafia and Nyamisati in Rufiji district takes days," said Makunga who explained that as a result, their merchandise which include organic cosmetics products like coconut oil, lotion and other cosmetics attract high fares.

Slow Food launches 'Meat the Change' campaign

By Beatrice Philemon

SLOW Food-a global network of local communities has launched the worldwide Campaign dubbed: 'Meat the Change campaign' to change people's meat -eating habits, with the aim of reaching people all over the world, thanks to its network of activists in 160 countries and the support of its organizational structure.

A statement issued by Giulia Capaldi and Paola Nano from Slow Food Office indicate that the aim of the campaign is to raise awareness of the importance of reducing meat consumption, the associated benefits for the environment and human health, and to support the farmers who raise animals in harmony with nature, with respect for animal welfare and ecosystems.

Apart from that the campaign aims to encourage people to reflect on the consequences of their food choices.

The Meat the Change campaign has been developed in collaboration with Meatless Monday, a non-profit initiative whose goal is to reduce meat consumption by 15% both for our health and the health of the planet.

Slow Food is a global network of local communities founded in 1989 to prevent the disappearance of local food cultures and traditions and counteract the rise of fast food culture.

Since its founding, Slow Food has grown into a global movement involving millions of people in over 160 countries, working to ensure that everyone has access to good, clean and fair food. Slow Food is the umbrella organisation responsible for guiding the entire movement.

Emphasizing on what exactly does "being Slow" mean, it says it means eating less meat, of better quality. Sustainable farming guarantees quality meat because it puts the welfare of the animals first, leaving them free to move around in open pastures and feeding them with organic feed.

"Being Slow" also means having a lower environmental impact: sustainable farming contributes to the reduction of deforestation, land use, desertification," it says.

Also it can help to save biodiversity and improve soil fertility. A lower number of animals, when raised on pastures, have less impact on the

In this sense, the campaign promotes an environmentally- and climatefriendly lifestyle, starting with a lower consumption of meat, and of better, slower meat.

The over-consumption of meat from intensive, industrial livestock farming is a serious problem, as demonstrated by numerous studies and surveys.

According to FAO, the livestock sector is responsible for 14.5 per cent of total greenhouse gas emissions, while one third of the world's cultivated land is used to produce the billion tonnes of feed required to feed these animals: mainly soy and maize monocultures.

Then there are the water resources required as 23 per cent of our globallyavailable fresh water is used for livestock farming. The intensive farms have also a strong impact on ecosystems in terms of pollution from livestock manure and methane emissions.

The animals that live and die in this system are considered as nothing more than simple meat machines, with no regard for their welfare or the distressing conditions in which they

The ultimate result is the production of cheap, poor quality meat that has a negative impact on public health, which contributes to antimicrobial resistance and to an increase in cancer and heart diseases.

If global annual meat consumption doubles between now and 2050 as FAO has predicted - from over 250 million tonnes of meat to 500 million tonnes, the system will collapse. "The global industrial farming model forces us to deal with unsustainable environmental and social costs. We need to rethink of our consumption in order to imagine a better future and consumer choices are crucial to influence and direct the market supply.

Audit COOPERATIVE Supervision Corporation (COASCO) has called on cooperatives board leaders to submit audit reports and pay annual fees on time as required by law.

Speaking here over the weekend, Coasco auditor for the southern highlands, Peter Lema said there are many cooperatives which are reluctant to submit their audited reports and settling their fees.

Due to this, Lema said Coasco inspected 356 cooperatives for 2018/2019 in order to identify coops which are operating against the law governing their operations.

are responsible for keeping records and making sure that records are submitted to the auditor immediately after calculating the relevant cooperative.

He noted that if the cooperative accounts will not be submitted timely within three months after the annual's financial statement, it is clear that members of the corporative boards will be held responsible.

"You are all aware that members of Lema said that according to the cooperative boards can lose their financial statements within three annually for the purpose of auditing months," he said.

He said the law demands them to do so, some cooperative board members have been delaying to submit their information purposely, as well as failing to pay their cooperative fees on time.

"Coasco, at the region level, is supposed to conduct audits within those cooperatives regardless of whether the cooperative has paid the fee or has not paid," he added.

He said the cooperative boards are required to submit corporate reports and that any corporate board that fails to submit to the board members lack qualifications to be in office.

CONTRACTORS REGISTRATION BOARD

EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR ONLINE SUBMISSION OF ANNUAL RETURN FORMS FOR THE FINANCIAL YEAR 2018/19

The Board would like to inform all contractors that deadline for online submission of Annual Return Forms for the financial year 2018/19 has been extended up-to 30th June, 2020. Contractors with incomplete online submission and those who have not attempted the exercise are urged to submit the complete forms online by the mentioned date.

To access the system online, use the URL mis.crbtz.org:8081 or follow the link through ARF 2018/19 button on the Board's website www.crb.go.tz to register a user account for the system. From the pop-up dialogue box, the user will select "Register" to create an account by filling-in all required information and "Submit" whereby username ID and password will be sent to the user's email address initially provided during the registration process.

To fill-in the ARF online, the registered user will "Login" through the aforementioned URL or link by entering the username ID and password. From the display page, the user will click "ARF" from "Create new ARF" button and enter the details as required and "Save" upon completion.

To check if the form is successfully submitted, the user may access the filled ARF from "Search ARF" menu and determine its status as being "Submitted" or "Incomplete". Forms with "Incomplete" status must be rectified until they acquire a "Submitted" status. The online submission must be done by the Managing Director or Technical Director.

For assistance on the procedure of online submission of the returns, kindly contact the Board Officers through 0715550088 (Amosy) or 0718842842 (Ibrahim).

Consultant, Local Organization Assessment Health Policy Plus (HP+) project, Tanzania

Position Summary

The USAID-funded Health Policy Plus (HP+) project, implemented by Palladium, is seeking multiple consultants to assess the readiness of local organizations in Tanzania to directly receive and manage USAID PEPFAR awards.

HP+ works with key stakeholders to advance health policy priorities in HIV, family planning, reproductive, and maternal health. The project aims to improve the enabling environment for equitable and sustainable health services, supplies, and delivery systems through policy development and implementation, with an emphasis on voluntary, rights-based health programs. Consultants will work as a team with in-country and headquarters-based HP+ staff to adapt and apply USAID's Organizational Capacity Assessment (OCA) with items from the Non-U.S. Organization Pre-Award Survey (NUPAS) tool.

This is a part-time, fixed-term contract; estimated timeframe January-April 2020.

The position is restricted to Tanzanian nationals.

Qualified candidates will have expertise in areas relevant to HIV programming and service delivery, PEPFAR and survey data analysis, or NUPAS-including financial management and internal controls, compliance, HIV clinical and programmatic data/issues, organizational development, governance, and social and behaviour change communication; bachelor's degree (BS/BA) required, advanced degree preferred; well-developed analytic, written and oral communication skills in English and Kiswahili requred; expertise in HIV care and treatment and/or key populations preferred; experience administering OCA with NUPAS and/or NUPAS preferred; knowledge of PEPFAR data desired; computer literacy in Word, Excel and PowerPoint preferred; strong interpersonal and organizational skills and the ability to work cross-culturally with diverse teams highly desirable.

Please visithttp://thepalladiumgroup.com/jobs/Consultants-for-Local-Organization-Assessments-VN8138 for the full job specification and application procedures.

The deadline for applications is January 19, 2020.

Taking A New Look At The News ESTABLISHED IN 1995

Local scientists should track lung cells targeting in treating TB

ESEARCH on the tedious treatment of tuberculosis, which routinely requires over 60 dozes of medicine without fail may soon get a break if reported new openings from Irish scientists prove to be effective. They have discovered a way to improve treatment for tuberculosis by taking a shot at what causes, fortifies resistance of the TB bacterium by isolating its genetic defences and directing vaccines to that point.

TB is a disease due to an infection from a bacterium, mycobacterium tuberculosis. Scientists say it is one of the oldest known diseases and still it remains the world's deadliest infectious disease. Most of us know how terrible that disease is, as we see affected people more or less routinely, but happily we also see some getting effectively cured.

UN agencies affirm that while TB is rampant in Africa, the growing problem of antibiotic resistance is posing a significant threat worldwide. The diseased infects lung macrophage cells and then manipulates them to its benefit, creating a safe home for it to hide out unperturbed, sometimes for years. That means it takes up the biochemical environment it has invaded to suit its needs, evidently by adapting to that environment, creating enzymes that tally with it.

The good news is that scientists from Trinity University in the Irish Republic have discovered both how TB puts the brakes on our immune systems and how we can kick-start them back into gear. It means reversing the adaptation mechanism of the bacterium, and thus medicine work as it is supposed to be. This development has generated new hope that improved treatment options could soon be on the horizon, setting out to manufacturers for affordable drugs.

The scientists essentially examined how lung immunity assuring cells, how they behave during infection, with the reports saying that the work illustrates how simple sugar or glucose enhances macrophages' anti-bacterial activities. Persistent infection of these macrophages with TB hampers our glucose-filled engines, which in effect shuts down the body's natural response to infection, allowing the bacteria to hide undisturbed. Tailing the path of infection is what led the team of scientists to focus on the crucial processes of bacterial adaptivity.

A leading scientist said that the team found that when TB-infected cells are treated with a key 'interferon gamma protein signal' normally produced following vaccination, it works. The effect is that it removes the malignany microRNA to effectively relieve the brake and restore our normal immune response, the scientist underlined. Ribonucleic acid (RNA) is a multiple use molecule essential in various biological roles in coding, decoding, regulation and expression of genes. RNA and DNA are nucleic acids which beef up the work of basic nutritious material in our bodies, and thus are essential building blocks of living things.

As it is evidently the case, the research could have major implications for the future treatment of TB. The Irish team says that what is particularly promising from a societal impact perspective is that as well as increasing our knowledge of how TB corrupts our normal immune response to infection, identification of the microRNA-21 shall enable scientists to develop improved immunotherapies or vaccine strategies to help in the fight against TB infection.

It is thus a point where local research comes up, as the rest is applied research and even use of existing medicine to target that particular zone of the infection mechanism.

Africa's warm climate is conducive to growing sorghum: It remains a crucial staple food

ORGHUM is a genus of flowering plants in the grass family Poaceae. Seventeen of the 25 species are native to Australia, with the range of some extending to Africa, Asia, Mesoamerica, and certain islands in the Indian and Pacific Oceans. One species is grown for grain, while many others are used as fodder plants, either cultivated in warm climates worldwide or naturalised, in pasture lands. Sorghum is in the subfamily panicoideae and the tribe andropogoneae (the tribe of big bluestem and sugarcane).

The largest area of sorghum production is in India, followed by Nigeria, Sudan and Niger. Fifty three percent of the world's production area is located in sub-Saharan Africa. ... In Western and Central Africa the area devoted to sorghum has more than doubled since the 1970s, but yields have not grown at the same rate.

One species, Sorghum bicolor, native to Africa with many cultivated forms now, is an important crop worldwide, used for food (as grain and in sorghum syrup or sorghum molasses), animal fodder, the production of alcoholic beverages, and biofuels. Most varieties are drought- and heat-tolerant, and are especially important in arid regions, where the grain is one of the staples for poor and rural people. These varieties form important components of forage in many tropical regions. S. bicolor is an important food crop in Africa, Central America, and South Asia, and is the fifth-most important cereal crop grown in the world. Global demand for sorghum increased dramatically between 2013 and 2015 when China began purchasing US sorghum crops to use as livestock feed as a substitute for domestically grown corn.

A new study that examines the genetics behind the bitter taste of some sorghum plants and one of Africa's most reviled bird species illustrates how human genetics, crops and the environment influence one another in the process of plant domestication. The study untangles these factors to create a more complete look at crop domestication than is possible in other major crops, said Xianran Li, an adjunct associate professor in the Iowa State University Department of Agronomy and corresponding author of the paper. The study, published recently in the scientific journal Nature Plants, looked at how human genetics, and the presence of bird species with a taste for sorghum seeds might have influenced the traits farmers in Africa selected in their crops over thousands of years. The unique geographic distribution in Africa of sorghum plants that contain condensed tannins, or biomolecules that often induce a bitter taste, provided one side of a "domestication triangle" that helped the researchers piece together the domestication puzzle, Li said.

Sorghum is a cereal crop first domesticated in Africa that remains a staple food throughout the continent. The researchers noted that sorghum varieties with high levels of tannins commonly grow in eastern and southern Africa, while western African farmers tend to prefer varieties with low tannin content. In contrast, domestication processes in other continents removed condensed tannins from most other cereal crops, such as wheat, rice and corn, due to the bitter taste they produce.

The research team grew sorghum varieties with and without tannin and analyzed publicly available datasets on human genetics and wild bird populations in Africa to untangle how these factors interact with one another to influence the domestication of sorghum in Africa. The experiments involving sorghum grown in Iowa found sparrows would feed on the seeds of plants without tannin but left alone the cultivars that contained tannin, reinforcing the concept that herbivore threats to sorghum crops prefer non-tannin varieties.

Ethiopia lifts-up tax on export of semi-finished leather products

By Special Correspondent

THIOPIA has the largest livestock population in Africa with 56.7 million cattle, including 12.65 million milking cows and the programme intervention builds on the priorities set in the national plan for the sector to bring about radical change in both sedentary agriculture and pastoral Ministry of Trade and Industry announced that Ethiopia has lifted-up the tax imposed on export of pickled and white blue leather products since January 06/2020 to rescue the sector.

Briefing the media on Wednesday State Minister Teka Gebreyesus stated that the implementation of tax on export of semi-finished leather products has seriously affected the

Meanwhile Teka noted that since the tax imposed on the sector was high and identified as the main factor for the sector's failure, government decides to lift the tax on exporting of pickled, white blue and crest products in accordance with 61/2012 proclamation implemented since Monday January 06/2020.

Ethiopian Raw Hides and Skin Suppliers' Association President Berhanu Abate noted that although Ethiopian hides and skin are most preferred, taxation appeared to be potential hazard for the sectors performance. According to him, 80 percent of hide and skin traders withdrew from the leather industry following the enforcement of the tax. (The Ethiopian Herald)

World Bank cuts Ethiopia GDP forecast to 6.3% for 2020 fiscal year

The World Bank has cut Ethiopia's economic growth forecast to 6.3 percent for the 2020 fiscal year, down from an earlier estimate of 9.0 percent, citing the growing debt burden of stateowned firms and a worsening security situation.

Ethiopia's central bank earlier this week forecast the economy would expand by 10.8 percent in its 2019/20 fiscal year that ends in July, up from nine percent in the previous year.

Prime Minister Abiy Ahmed (PhD), who came to power in 2018, has started ambitious economic reforms aimed at opening up one of Africa's fastestgrowing but most closed economies.

The government says the first sector to be liberalized will be telecom.

It plans to issue two telecoms licenses to multinational mobile companies this year, ending a state monopoly. It has also pledged to gradually liberalize its exchange rate.

Ethiopia officially the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia is a country in the Horn of Africa. It shares borders with Eritrea to the north, Djibouti to the northeast, Somalia to the east, Sudan and South Sudan to the west, and Kenya to the south. With over 102 million inhabitants, Ethiopia is the most populous landlocked country in the world and the secondmost populous nation on the African continent. It occupies a total area of 1,100,000 square kilometres (420,000 sq mi), and its capital and largest city is Addis Ababa.

Some of the oldest skeletal evidence for anatomically modern humans has been found in Ethiopia. It is widely considered as the region from which modern humans first set out for the Middle East and places beyond. According to linguists, the first Afroasiatic-speaking populations settled in the Horn region during the ensuing Neolithic era. Tracing its roots to the 2nd millennium BC, Ethiopia's governmental system was a monarchy for most of its history. In the first centuries AD, the Kingdom of Aksum maintained a unified civilization in the region, followed by the Ethiopian Empire circa 1137. During the late 19thcentury Scramble for Africa, Ethiopia was one of two nations to retain its sovereignty from long-term colonialism by a European colonial power. Many newly-independent nations on the continent subsequently adopted its flag colours. The country was occupied by Italy in 1936 and became Italian Ethiopia (part of the Italian East Africa) until 1941. Ethiopia was also the first independent member from Africa of the 20th-century League of Nations and the United Nations. In 1974, the Ethiopian monarchy under Haile Selassie was overthrown by the Derg, a communist military government backed by the Soviet Union. In 1987, the Derg established the People's Democratic Republic of Ethiopia, but it was overthrown in 1991 by the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front, which has been the ruling political coalition since.

Ethiopia and Eritrea use the ancient Ge'ez script, which is one of the oldest alphabets still in use in the world. The Ethiopian calendar, which is approximately seven years and three months behind the Gregorian calendar, co-exists alongside the Borana calendar. A majority of the population adheres to Christianity (mainly the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church and P'ent'ay), whereas around a third follows Islam (primarily Sunni). The country is the site of the Migration to Abyssinia and the oldest Muslim settlement in Africa at Negash. A substantial population of Ethiopian Jews, known as Bete Israel, also resided in Ethiopia until the 1980s. Ethiopia is a multilingual nation with around 80 ethnolinguistic groups, the four largest of which are the Oromo, Amhara, Somali and Tigrayans. Most people in the country speak Afroasiatic languages of the Cushitic or Semitic branches. Additionally, Omotic languages are spoken by ethnic minority groups inhabiting the southern regions. Nilo-Saharan languages are also spoken by the nation's Nilotic ethnic minorities.

The nation is a land of natural contrasts, with its vast fertile west, its forests, and numerous rivers, and the world's hottest settlement of Dallol in its north. The Ethiopian Highlands are the largest continuous mountain ranges in Africa, and the Sof Omar Caves contains the largest cave on the continent. Ethiopia also has the most UNESCO World Heritage Sites in Africa. Additionally, the sovereign state is a founding members of the UN, the Group of 24 (G-24), the Non-Aligned Movement, G-77 and the Organisation of African Unity. Its capital city Addis Ababa serves as the headquarters of the African Union, the Pan African Chamber of Commerce and Industry, United Nations Economic Commission for Africa, the African Standby Force, and many of the global NGOs focused on Africa. In the 1970s and 1980s, Ethiopia experienced civil conflicts and communist purges, which hindered its economy. The country has since recovered and now has the largest economy (by GDP) in East Africa, having the largest population in the region.

Cybersecurity threats call for global response

AST March, Operation Taiex led to the arrest of the gang leader behind the Carbanak and Cobalt malware attacks on over 100 financial institutions worldwide.

This law enforcement operation included the Spanish national police, Europol, FBI, the Romanian, Moldovan, Belarusian, and Taiwanese authorities, as well as private cybersecurity companies. Investigators found out that hackers were operating in at least 15 countries.

We all know that money moves quickly around the world. As Operation Taiex shows, cybercrime is doing the same, becoming increasingly able to collaborate rapidly across borders.

To create a cyber-secure world, we must be as fast and globally integrated as the criminals. Facing a global threat with local resources will not be enough. Countries need to do more internally and internationally to coordinate their efforts.

How to best work together

To begin, the private sector offers many good examples of cooperation. The industry deserves credit for taking the lead in many areas-developing technical and risk management standards, convening information-sharing forums, and spending considerable resources.

International bodies, including the Group of 7 Cyber Experts group and the Basel Committee, are creating awareness and identifying sound practices for financial sector supervisors. This is important work.

But there is more to be done, especially if we take a global perspective. There are four areas where the international community can come together and boost the work being done at the national level:

First, we need to develop a greater understanding of the risks: the source and nature of threats and how they might impact financial stability. We need more data on threats and on the impact of successful attacks to better understand the risks.

Second, we need to improve collaboration on threat intelligence, incident reporting and best practices in resilience and response. Information sharing between the private and public sector needs to be improvedfor example, by reducing barriers to banks reporting issues to financial supervisors and law enforcement.

Different public agencies within a country need to communicate seamlessly. And most challenging, information sharing between countries must

Third, and related, regulatory approaches need to achieve greater consistency. Today, countries have different standards, regulations, and terminology. Reducing this inconsistency will facilitate more communication.

Finally, knowing that attacks will come, countries need to be ready for them. Crisis preparation and response protocols should be developed at both the national and cross-border level, so as to be able to respond and recover operations as soon as possible.

Crisis exercises have become crucial in building resilience and the ability to respond, by revealing gaps and weaknesses in processes and decision mak-

Connecting the global dots

Because a cyberattack can come from anywhere in the world, or many places at once, crisis response protocols must be articulated within regions and globally.

That means the relevant authorities need to know "whom to call" during a crisis, in nearby and, ideally, also in faraway countries. For small or developing countries, this is a challenge that needs international attention.

Many rely on financial services or correspondent lines provided by global banks for financial connection. Developing cross-border response protocols will help countries understand their respective roles in a crisis and ensure a coordinated response in the event of a crisis.

The Group of 7 countries has made an excellent start at building collaboration on cybersecurity, but this effort needs to be broadened to each and every country.

Here the IMF can play an important role. With a much broader representation than most of the standard-setting institutions, the IMF has the ability to raise the concerns of emerging-market and developing countries to a global

Because any place is a good place to start an attack, it is in the ultimate interest of advanced economies to work with other countries to share information, coordinate actions, and build ca-

At the IMF, we work with countries that need to build this capacity, developing the skills and expertise needed to recognize and effectively counter cybersecurity threats. Our international partners are doing the same, and we work regularly with an array of stakeholders in the public and private Successful cyber-attacks have the potential to hamper financial development by creating distrust, especially if personal and financial data are compromised.

If we want to reap the benefits of new technologies that can develop markets and expand financial inclusion, we have to preserve trust, and ensure the security of information and communications technologies.

With cybersecurity, there is always more to be done simply because the pace of change is breathtakingly fast.

A friendship of trust, President Kenyatta and UN Secretary General Guterres exchange notes during the UNGA 2019 in

United Nations reformsfrom ideas to actions

NAIROBI, Kenya

NE of the highlight activities as the Nations commemorates its 75th anniversary this year will be the launch of an "annual temperature check" on Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), progress. With only ten years left to the final whistle for the Goals, this activity that will take place each September will provide a snapshot of what's working, and where countries need more action.

As a citizen of this great country, I am proud that Kenya was one of the leaders and architects of the open working group that led to the realization of the SDGs, led by our very own PS of Foreign Affairs, Ambassador Macharia Kamau.

The globally-agreed Goals provided the roadmap towards ending poverty and hunger everywhere; to combating inequalities within and among countries; to building peaceful and inclusive societies; to protecting human rights and promoting gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls; and to ensuring the lasting protection of the planet and its natural re-

It is the time to consider our own progress in Kenya. Around the country, there are signposts of progress: maternal and child mortality are down, devolution is bringing development to what were once considered remote areas and school enrollment rates are rising.

The biggest challenge in Kenya, as in much of Africa, is that this progress is fragile and unequal and many in the country still feel they are being left behind. That is why President Kenyatta launched the Big 4 development agenda with a clear intention of leaving no one behind.

Corruption remains a scourge that is undermining the progress Kenya is making. The President is personally leading the fight against corruption and we are pleased that the UN is in full support. With all the SDGs having time-bound targets, the Government of Kenya and the UN in Kenya are accelerating initiatives that will give the country respectable scores by 2030, in key sectors including health, education, employment, agriculture, affordable housing, energy, infrastructure and the environment.

There are encouraging signs that in this UN Decade of Action, the tide will turn, with the clearest sign of this being the new paradigm in SDG implementation mechanisms brought by the reforms in the UN.

The structural reforms led by the UN Secretary-General António Guterres have ushered in a new era of strengthened implementation founded on leadership, cohesion, accountability and results. In Kenya, the UN Country Team is moving very well towards being more integrated, more aligned and more effective in its response to national government priorities.

With the UN Resident Coordinator's Office led by Siddharth Chatterjee as the hub, there is visibly better coherence in policy, partnerships and investments around the responses.

The UN Country Team has substantially increased engagement with the relevant Ministries. Departments and Agencies towards implementing the current UN Development Assistance Framework, (UNDAF) whose overall agenda is delivering on the transformative Big Four Agenda and the specific country targets of the Sustainable Development

Key features of this engagement now include joint work planning, better monitoring and transparency. In previous years, the engagement has been pulled back by insufficient coordination, with none other than President Uhuru Kenyatta flagging this shortcoming.

The UNDAF National Steering Committee is now focussed more on people and less on process, more on results for those left farthest behind, and more on integrated support to the SDG Agenda and less on "business as usual".

This out-of-the-box approach is being recognised for its concrete footprint, as exemplified by the recent initiative to tackle crossborder challenges between Uganda and Kenya, a brainchild of the President of Kenya and fully supported by the UN teams in the two countries that was launched in September 2019. The initiative is an example of the Government and the UN responding in new ways to the new threats we face, and specifically the new emphasis on prevention and sustaining peace for development.

The 2030 Agenda will require bold changes to the UN development system for the emergence of a new generation of country teams, centred on a strategic UN Development Assistance Framework and led by an impartial, independent and empowered resident coordinator says Amina J Mohammed, the UN Deputy Secretary General, in a video message.

No doubt, the challenge of Agenda 2030 are monumental and will require that our engagement is innovative in unlocking doors to financing and technologies, reaching out to other partners such as the private sector, foundations and philanthropies.

This is the thinking behind the co-creation of an SDG innovation lab between the Government of Kenya, the Center for Effective Global Action (CEGA) at the University of California, Berkeley, Rockefeller Foundation and the UN. The Lab will kick off with support for the delivery of Kenya's Big Four agenda.

China, Myanmar to jointly carry forward friendship and create new chapter of friendly cooperation

By Ren Huanyu

T the invitation of President U Win Myint of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar, ⊾Chinese President Xi Jinping will pay a state visit to Myanmar from Jan. 17 to 18. The visit is expected to help enhance bilateral ties and further promote joint efforts of the two countries to build on past achievements and continue to forge ahead.

The upcoming visit, which coincides with the 70th anniversary of the establishment of the diplomatic ties between China and Myanmar, will also mark the first visit by a Chinese president to Myanmar in 19 years.

China and Myanmar are close neighbors linked by mountains and rivers. The two peoples enjoy profound

"Paukphaw" (fraternal) friendship. Since the founding of the People's Republic of China, leaders of China and Myanmar exchanged visits frequently. Late Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai visited Myanmar 9 times, and late leader of Myanmar Ne Win visited China 12 times, creating great stories of China-Myanmar friendship.

In 1950s, the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence jointly advocated by Premier Zhou, Myanmar's former Prime Minister U Nu, and India's first Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru has become globally recognized basic norms governing state-to-state relations and contributed significantly to safeguarding peace and stability in the

In recent years, China and Myanmar have witnessed frequent high-level exchanges, expanding pragmatic cooperation, dynamic people-to-people and cultural exchanges, and close multilateral coordination, bringing tangible benefits to the peoples of the two countries while making positive contributions to regional peace and

The forthcoming visit of Xi to Myanmar is worth the anticipation of both countries. The trip to be embarked on by Xi is expected to serve as a great occasion for the two countries to review past experience and formulate a new blueprint for the future, which will enable China and Myanmar to further enrich bilateral ties, make concerted efforts to build a community of shared future for China and Myanmar, and start a brand new journey of China-Myanmar relations.

Under the strategic leadership of leaders of the two countries, China-Myanmar "Paukphaw" friendship has constantly injected new vitality into the joint efforts of the two countries at the construction of the Belt and Road.

China regards Myanmar as an important partner in the joint construction of the Belt and Road. The two countries enjoy significant complementary advantages and huge potential for cooperation. The government of Myanmar has established a specialized steering committee for the implementation of tasks relating to the Belt and Road Initiative (BRI), and appointed Myanmar's State Counselor Aung San Suu Kyi as the chair of the committee.

On Dec.1, 2017, Xi and Aung San Suu Kyi reached important consensus on jointly building the China-Myanmar Economic Corridor (CMEC) under the framework of the BRI, thus pushing the rapid construction of the China-Myanmar Economic Corridor.

On Sept.9, 2018, China and Myanmar signed a memorandum of understanding (MOU) on jointly building the Myanmar has supported the BRI since the very beginning, and has actively expanded cooperation with China, noted Aung San Suu Kyi during her meeting with Xi in Beijing ahead of the second Belt and Road Forum for International Cooperation in April 2019.

As the pilot project in the construction of the Belt and Road, the completion of the China-Myanmar oil and gas pipeline project has solved the problem of oil and gas supply in the downstream market and helped Myanmar realize foreign exchange earnings from the export of oil and gas, bringing considerable economic revenue to Myanmar while effectively boosting the country's employment and social and economic development. The gas-fired power plant in Belin, Kyuakse Township in Mandalay, Myanmar, with a Chinese company as the EPC contractor, is the largest gas-fired power plant in Myanmar.

The power plant is able to generate about 1.27 billion kilowatt hours of electricity per year. It has solved the problem of the power shortage of 2.7 million people in Myanmar upon completion.

The Letpadaung copper mine project operated by a Chinese company in Monywa, Myanmar, has realized win-win results for multiple parties, including Chinese company and its Myanmar cooperative partners, as well as the government of Myanmar, adjacent communities of the project, and employees in the copper mine. Trauma counselling enables the reintegration of former terrorists

BY ISEL VAN ZYL

OKO Haram and Islamic State West Africa Province (ISWAP) have been terrorising communities and radicalising individuals in Nigeria since 2009. Between 2011 and 2013 the group turned its attention to neighbouring Cameroon. From 2014 to 2016 Boko Haram launched 400 attacks on the country, including 50 suicide bombings, killing more than 1300 civilians.

Now Cameroonian nationals who were members of Boko Haram are returning to their home country due to disillusionment and fear of being killed by military forces. Hostages are also returning home after military operations freed them from the group.

Humanitarian camps that receive victims of terror attacks often provide them with trauma care, but psychosocial support for returning extremists is limited. Research has shown that terror suspects are often detained for months ed for both community members who accept rehabilitated extremists back and for those who defect from violent extremist groups. Limited capacity however means that aid workers and psychologists would rather attend to the needs of victims than perpetrators. Counselling for former fighters is an important but neglected part of the overall response to terrorism.

Another reason this aspect is neglected is that there's a stigma attached to trauma counselling for affected communities. If an individual or community accepts psychosocial support, it suggests they've been 'tainted' by Boko Haram. Any 'tainted' parties are shunned and treated with hostility by other communities. Former Boko Haram members, regardless of the role they played while part of the group, are often rejected by their families and communities upon their return.

Due to the high number of internally displaced people, victims of terror attacks and returning fighters, the capacity to provide counselling services in the Lake Chad Basin

In Cameroon, local organisations have begun training community members to provide psychosocial support. Nigeria's Operation Safe Corridor recognises what is called 'post-exit trauma' and has included psychosocial support as part of its strategy to prevent and counter violent ex-

Both victims and members of terrorist groups need help to overcome the trauma caused by attacks, says Fidèle Djebba of Association Rayons de Soleil in Cameroon. She told Institute for Security Studies researchers that terrorists who defect or are freed from extremist groups need help to deal with their crimes and the violence they have witnessed. Counselling and rehabilitation are essential if they are to return to a normal life as contributing members

Djebba believes that if a person's trauma is not adequately addressed, the individual could return to violent activity or be incapacitated by post-traumatic stress disorder. Victims also need support to cope with the return of their attackers, as do former terrorists' families. She says families and communities who aren't helped to address their trauma will struggle to take back former perpetrators.

'While Cameroon is engaged in a process of disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration of former extremists, it is important that the victims of violent extremism are adequately prepared for the return of former combatants,' says Djebba. 'This requires healing of internal wounds. If nothing is done, we see individuals executing acts of revenge against the returning combatants.

In one case, 96 men at Gombe base undergoing Nigeria's Operation Safe Corridor were too afraid to leave the camp and return to their communities in fear of retribution and Psychosocial support should be provided by psychologists, social workers and first responders. But Cameroon's Ministry of Social Affairs doesn't have sufficient staff to do this and most of the affected villages don't have social centres or infrastructure. Psychologists deployed to communities also have time constraints, and can't attend to everyone, especially in the Far North Region.

In an attempt to overcome this lack of infrastructure and qualified personnel, Djebba's organisation started training community leaders in basic psychosocial support so they can identify and listen to those in need. The training also entails matching victims with appropriate counsellors. All information practitioners receive is kept confidential.

Apart from the benefits for individuals, families and communities directly affected by violent extremism, counselling can help prevent terrorism. But psychosocial support must be just one aspect of a holistic approach that includes comprehensive care of the individual.

'Healing will promote forgiveness and reconciliation. However, this healing process must be accompanied by strategies for repairing, rebuilding or rehabilitating the victims,' says Djebba. Psychosocial support should, for example, be accompanied by help with housing, food and medical services.

For communities affected by terrorism, the overwhelming focus is on the immediate need for food, medical help and water - not psychosocial support. Organisations like Association Rayons de Soleil face the dual challenge of raising awareness about why psychosocial support is essential, and then ensuring that this specialised service can be provided to those who need it.

Upgrading the police toolbox

BY ANDREW FAULL

Modern policing is full of catchy legitimate. Those who follow policing in South Africa will recognise many of them, including 'community policing', 'broken-windows policing', 'intelligence-led policing', 'back-to-basics policing', 'sector policing', 'hotspot policing' and 'problem-oriented policing'.

Despite claims that these initiatives are being used in South Africa, crime and violence remain high, and trust in the police is low. Is there an approach or philosophy that can turn this around?

The police strategies listed above are not mutually exclusive. Community policing is a philosophy under which almost any other intervention can be implemented. Similarly, one can 'do' intelligenceled, broken-windows or zero-tolerance policing in crime hotspots, or simply 'do' hotspot policing by itself.

It is important for politicians and the public to ask what police mean when they use these buzzwords. And police should demonstrate that they plan, monitor and evaluate the impact of their work to ascertain whether it actually gets the desired results.

Although the South African Police Service (SAPS) has an impressive performance monitoring system, it doesn't currently incentivise the evaluation of specific police practices at station level. Rather it captures a wealth of usepolice actually do.

So when reported crime goes up, or surveys show public trust going down, it's difficult to link these trends to police practices. To fix this, the SAPS should institutionalise the key tenets of evidencebased policing.

This approach suggests that policing should be based on the best existing research ('evidence') about which police activities really cally increase effectiveness and legitimacy.

Evidence-based policing champions the use of learning methodologies, the sharing of lessons and the replication of interventions in different contexts. A knowledge base of practices is established on which policing can exponentially improve. Using this approach, the content of the police toolbox can be tested and refined so that when police officers reach into it, they pull out only those tools likely to reduce harm and promote trust.

This is different to what generally happens in policing. Usually a limited range of tactics are relied on, often selected only because a commanding officer believes them to be effective (for example crackdown operations, roadblocks, stop-and-search operations, etc.). Evidence-based policing moves the selection of tactics from 'belief' in what works to 'evidence' for what works, including evidence for where, when and why it works.

Although not commonly referenced by SAPS officers or leadership, evidence-based policing is not entirely alien to the SAPS. In fact, some of its key tenets are built into the SAPS's primary urban policing model, known as 'sector policing'.

The SAPS requires that all urban precincts be divided into two or more sectors, which are studied ful but often oblique information in an effort to address their causes that reveals little about what the of crime and disorder. Responses must be monitored, evaluated and revised. As such, sector policing includes an element of evidencebased policing's targeting, testing and tracking.

At face value, the SAPS's sector policing strategy is excellent. However, it seems not to have been implemented as intended. This is partly because sector policing is not properly incentivised. To comply, stations need only meet a few work, and which don't. By tackling basic criteria, such as showing that a specific problem (targeting), ap- they have demarcated sectors, asplying a clear plan to address it signed sector commanders to (testing), and evaluating the im- them, and produced sector files phrases for innovations intended pact of the plan on the problem all of which can be easily achieved to make police more effective and (tracking), police can systemati- without changing or evaluating the impact of police practice.

Throughout 2019, the Institute for Security Studies (ISS) worked with the SAPS, academics, and research and policy community to raise awareness and understanding around evidence-based policing. These practices are central to South Africa's overall governance philosophy, and are embedded in the National Development Plan and White Papers on Policing and Safety and Security. But effective evidence-based practice has yet to filter down to station level polic-

One of the ISS's messages has been that the SAPS already has the basic philosophy and systems for sector policing, and that it is only a small step from successful sector policing to institutionalising evidence-based policing.

All 1 149 police stations in South Africa need to be incentivised to develop crime plans for tackling priority problems, and to monitor and evaluate progress and lessons learnt - both successes and failures. This would generate an evidence base to improve policing throughout the organisation along with public trust.

Given the substantial budget cuts the SAPS is facing, the organisation must become more effective and efficient. Evidence-based policing offers a practical and internationally supported approach to achieving this.

In November 2019 the Western Cape government launched its new Safety Plan, which makes explicit reference to evidence-based policing and violence prevention. This is an exciting and noteworthy development that should be extended across the country. With this system in place, the SAPS has a solid foundation from which to win public trust and make South Africa safe, and become a world leader in evidence-based policing.

Challenging gender norms, one garlic clove at a time: Mary James's Journey

By Benjamin Carson, Mbulu

MARY James arrives earlier than anyone else to the Bashay Agricultural Marketing Cooperative Society (AMCOS) building. Warehouse is a better word to describe the structure.

Its tall, beige support beams are met by grand aluminum roofing. A black gate guards the entrance and she slides it open slowly. Inside is dim, the windows only allowing a small amount of natural light to enter. Maroon metal baskets fill half the football field-sized room, each one about 10 feet tall. There are thousands of garlic heads in every container. Women from around the Bashay ward, or sparsely populated denomination of Mbulu district, are expected for a training on how to add value to garlic and pumpkin.

Mary is immediately busy organizing the participants and phoning those not there to make sure their transportation to the venue is secure. Before the National Network of Farmers' Groups in Tanzania (MVIWATA) and Sokoine University Graduate Entrepreneurs Cooperative (SUGECO) team - two Tanzanian agricultural NGOs focused on farmer mobilization and technological innovation, respectively – step out of their car, Mary is walking over to greet them.

Her smile radiates through the field team and makes them forget the cold and rainy weather that is uncharacteristic for October in the mountainous district.

Calmly, she ushers the team inside to set up chart paper for the theoretical portion of the session. I find myself nervous to interrupt Mary who seems so preoccupied, but her demeanor is far too inviting to invoke feelings of unwelcome. Women begin to arrive and, as they do, Mary engages each of them in conversation. Though brief in nature, her attention is never divided. Some women come with a concerned question or two, but in short order find reassurance with just a few words from their matron leader.

To the untrained observer Mary might be a simple farmer doing her part to secure nutrition and income for her family. But to many in the wards of Bashay and Mbulu Town, the 34-yearold is the most important leader in the greater ers, market garlic, process garlic into paste, pow-Mbulu District.

At the age of 20 Mary joined MVIWATA and mandazi – typical Tanzanian breakfast foods – since then has grown into a confident young woman who holds several roles on local councils; from member to secretary to treasurer to chairperson.

Her hard-earned status is challenging the gender confines prescribed to most Tanzanian women, and the journey to this point was just that – challenging and hard-earned.

Mary was in her early teens when one day her father fell ill and was not able to attend the local Village Community Bank or VICOBA meeting. He asked her to go in his stead. With each passing appearance, she grew more comfortable, offering new ideas and eventually earning her the spot of treasurer in the group.

Soon after this promotion, she would become the chairperson of the MVIWATA Bashay network – a position of great stature among villagers. Mary's leadership became more widely recognized and she was elected to the position of secretary for Bashay's local beekeeping group. From here she became a member of Mbulu District and Mbulu Town Councils where the community's economic and social issues are dis-

"These women have lost hope for a better life." Mary states grimly about the training's partici-

It's a common sentiment among farmers: bad seeds, lack of water, inconsistent customers, all contributing to discouragement. But agriculture is the backbone of Tanzanian livelihood, and it takes a seasoned veteran, like Mary, to show prospective farmers that they can be successful – an undertaking she has pursued relentlessly.

"Mary is a strong MVIWATA leader who has capacity and the ability to inspire many young women in the Bashay and Mbulu committees. We are lucky to have her." said Donald Laizer, MVIWATA Field Officer and long time colleague and friend of Mary

She attends value addition trainings regularly for a self-refresher on techniques, but has also come to provide encouragement for the local women, most of whom are in their late 40s to 50s, and most of whom have little education or vocational training. Over the four day session, Bashay women will learn how to target customder, and oil, as well as how to make chapati and from pumpkin puree.

"(The women) are getting inspired by the possibilities the training is opening them up to." Mary said with a tone of elevated excitement, as she describes forming the small garlic group following the training.

Mary, herself – the VICOBA Treasurer, the Beekeeping Group Secretary, the Mbulu District and Town Council Member, the MVIWATA Chairperson – is excited to get back to practicing her agricultural craft. Yes, Mary farms maize, sunflower, beans, and, of course, garlic. A job that requires constant monitoring, farming is no walk in the park. Amongst the culprits of discouragement (water insecurity, faulty seeds, inconsistent business) the underlying stress that farming is often a gamble proves the biggest burden of all.

Mary has never been deterred by this uncertainty, but still relies on farming as income. All her leadership roles are voluntary after all.

The Bashay value addition training was funded by Uniterra, MVIWATA's Canadian partner NGO, and featured a gender awareness component led by volunteers Laure Côté-Rabel and Audrey Gagné-Breton who are both supported by Canadian government. One of the activities challenged the participants to reconsider their perceptions of traditional gender roles at home and in the workplace.

"We hope that it will generate discussions and debates in [their] communities between men and women, and increase the level of confidence of women as leaders." Laure said. Deeply-rooted cultural norms, however, aren't changed overnight. It takes years of exercises like these to chip away at issues like this. Laure, along with myself and other Uniterra volunteers, work with local organizations to promote the inclusion of youth and women in their activities.

These conversations are difficult to indulge in a society dominated by patriarchy. It takes people like Mary to demonstrate young girls can break out of that cycle by persevering and challenging prescribed day-to-day activities.

"I am proud of where I've come, and I feel like I deserve it." Mary said with

First drone' data academy opens in Africa to improve service delivery for children

NEW YORK/LILONGWE

THE first African Drone and Data Academy (ADDA) opened on Monday in the Malawian capital, Lilongwe, United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has announced.

The move is part of efforts to promote the use of drones in programmes and services that will impact the lives of children and young people.

"Humanitarian and development programme delivery in Africa and beyond can benefit significantly from the application of drone technology," said UNICEF Executive Director Henrietta Fore. "The African Drone and Data Academy will be instrumental in equipping young people with the skills they need to use the technology to benefit children and their commu-

Building on the work of Africa's first humanitarian corridor launched in Malawi in 2017, the academy will develop expertise in the use of drones for humanitarian, development and commercial purposes across the continent through a 12-week course. It plans to train approximately 150 students to build and pilot drones by 2021. Funding from UNICEF's partners will provide free tuition to the first cohort of 26 students from across Africa.

"In Malawi we strongly believe that adopting modern technologies such as drones and advanced data analysis and management techniques will help us to serve our children better. We are proud to partner with UNICEF in such an exciting endeavor," said James Chakwera, Director of Malawi's Department of Civil Aviation.

The curriculum has been developed in partnership with Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University (Virginia Tech) - following its successful delivery of training workshops in Malawi since 2017. The course will combine theoretical and practical methodologies in making, testing and flying

By 2022, the academy will run a tuition-free two-year master's degree program in drone technology, in conjunction with Malawi University of Science and Technology (MUST). It will also deliver a curriculum that will build local capacity and a favorable ecosystem for the emergence of sustainable business models for using drones for humanitarian and development missions.

"The ADDA reflects Virginia Tech's ongoing commitment to the innovative application of drone technology and education in Malawi and the Africa region," said Kevin Kochersberger, associate professor at Virginia Tech who will lead the project. "The academy will give graduates the necessary skills for jobs using drone applications ranging from agriculture and health to natural resources monitoring."

African entrepreneurs are engineering economic solutions

By Jason Ford

A SIGNIFICANT disparity exists in continental Africa where the number of young people entering the labour market outnumbers the positions available by up to four-to-one.

According to the UN Economic Commission for Africa, around 10-12 million young people enter the workforce per year on a continent that creates approximately three million formal jobs. The same organisation estimates that one third of African youths aged 15-35 are unemployed, and another third are described as 'vulnerably employed'. Women face higher unemployment and underemployment than men and face greater obstacles to job opportunities and equal pay.

Significantly, the number of African youths is predicted to double to over 830 million by 2050, an apparent demographic timebomb that could be defused by cross-continental government initiatives designed to support young entrepreneurs, many of whom are applying engineering solutions to everyday problems.

Among them is Nigerian Aisha Raheem who has developed Farmz2U, a digital platform that prevents food waste by helping farmers plan their

Some of these include the Central Bank of Nigeria's MSME Development Fund launched in 2013 and the Skills Acquisition and Entrepreneurship Department (SAED), which supports graduates with loans, training and apprenticeship programs.

In Ghana, the National Entrepreneurship and Innovation Plan has been recently set up and is offering training and seed capital to young entrepreneurs. Furthermore, the Industrial Development Corporation provides business finance at preferential rates for qualifying start-ups.

The 2019 African Economic Conference concluded that regional success stories should be replicated across the continent with multiple stakeholders exchanging ideas and sharing best practices.

In the elusive grip of an abusive partner: A migrant's story

O live in a home with family, to have a safe environment, food and basic human necessities, are some of the essentials that most people expect to have without giving it all much thought. When a child is born, parents or caregivers are likely to provide these things. These expectations get renewed whenever someone gets married and moves to a new home, a different neighborhood, or a city. We can hardly find someone who will say that they were not expecting happiness and safety when stepping into a new relationship, or starting a new chapter of life. But these expectations of a better life turn disastrous for millions of people when they step into another country as a dependent.

For most immigrants coming to the United States of America, it seems like a golden gate to happiness, safety, security and all the perks of life. First generations of immigrants come with a mentality of struggling and achieving their dreams while maintaining their traditional and cultural ways. They invest in making their dreams come true, but at the same time, they long for the lost traits of their old home and societal practices as they adjust to new ways of life. They try to hold strongly to their roots and expect their children to be moral citizens of the United States, successful and accomplished, yet having a love for their home country which they, themselves left behind. The second generation of Immigrants has their lives a little bit more sorted. They are given steadier lives compared to their parents, but in return, they face the constant challenge of adjusting to two types of very different societal paradigms and customs. For instance, when it comes to people from the Asian community, the children born and raised in the United States, are expected to marry a girl or boy from the country of origin of their parents. The spouse is expected to be an ideal person who upholds family values and cultural norms. Many times people from developing countries aspire to get their children married to someone who is from the United States, in hope of someday making their way into this country of dreams and in hope of their children having a better life. This mindset gives birth to a population of dependent spouses.

The spouses of the second generation, and sometimes even of the first generations who migrate to the United States are a unique segment of people who in most cases remain solely dependent on their partner to enter the United States and also for their livelihood after migration. A portion of them integrate well into society, study and hold jobs eventually after the move. But the majority fails to spread their wings, becoming a burden and potential targets for abuse. They remain dependent on their spouses for a long period of time, and are severely governed by the spouses, in-laws and are forced to stay imprisoned in their own homes. The real scenarios, truth, and consequences remain in a gray zone, killed by intimate partners or silenced and hushed. Women family members, meaning that become victims of other's high expectations. They become the means by which others carry out frustration.

To understand such domestic violence, even if we listen to the voices of the immigrants' wives and women, we will only get to see only a fraction of the picture. The numbers of reported abuse and violence against women are alarming as is. In a study carried by the United Nations Office of Drugs and Crimes in 2019, it is estimated that of the 87,000 women who were intentionally killed in 2017 globally, more than half (50,000- 58 percent) were 137 women across the world are killed by a member of their own family every day. From the Global Database on Violence against Women, some national studies were done and it shows that up to 70 percent of women have experienced physical and/or sexual violence from an intimate partner in their lifetime.

The United States is a developed first world country, provides benefits and assistance to anyone under threat and abuse, and that is a relief to hundreds of people. Thankfully, it is the existence of the various organizations, NGOs, governmental institutions and social workers that many women and children seek assistance and are saved from the grave and severe situations at home. However, the number of people seeking out or coming across help is very little and may be viewed as the tip of an iceberg. The segment of victimized individuals mostly lives under the poverty line, not mixing much with the society and remaining invisible for most parts. The language barrier, lack of friends and family in this country, helplessness, and void of financial stability makes matters exponentially worse.

Newly arrived immigrant women whose immigration status has not been permanently established, or are undocumented, conditional residents or whose visas have special needs, somewhat live at the mercy of their partners. Most often than not, these women are manipulated with unsettled immigration status as a means of continuing their abusive relationships. Their passports, social security cards, certificates or any other important documents are held by the partner or by the families they come into. They are constantly harassed and intimidated by threats of abandonment, emotionally and mentally tortured, their children are threatened to be separated and harmed if they communicate with others, and their entire financial situation is monitored and handled by the abusers. Many times it is heard that the abusers threaten to harm their family back home too.

I myself am a survivor of 15 years of emotional, financial and physical abuse by my partner. I am also an immigrant woman and mother of three daughters. My children and I were abandoned in Asia, despite being citizens of the United States of America. We were barred from coming back, denied access to our home in the United States of America, and left without any sort of financial help. Moreover, I faced identity theft and my social security details were compromised after being announced deceased by my spouse. From my own personal journey, starting from the detection and identification of abuse, speaking up and seeking help, reaching out to the proper authorities, participating in therapy and counseling for myself and for my children, going through phases of self-restoration and healing periods, and lastly through rebuilding our lives, I have gathered valuable insights about patterns of abuse and overcoming it. I have been working closely with various organizations in New York City and have met and talked with hundreds of women who are victims of abuse by their spouses, partners, and family members, and are from immigrant families. I have volunteered and sought help from organizations named SAKHI: for South Asian Women, Safe Horizon, Chaya CDC NYC, Sanctuary for families, Safest community-based NGO in Bronx, WOMANKIND: I am Womankind, and with Make the Road New York.

I wish to shed some light on the topic of domestic abuse among immigrant women of the Asian demographics from my personal point of view and experiences. It is my hope that others can be brought to awareness through the sharing of my story, and through the discussions of the root causes that can cause these situations.

SILVER SPRINGS, Maryland

on Earth." "Catastrophic.' In Australia, these terms are being used to describe 17.9 million acres of burned land so far. While fires of this magnitude are certainly unprecedented, they're far from unexpected.

Climatologists have warned that the changing climate will have vast implications for our planet's weather patterns and natural disasters. But these warnings have done little to drive urgent climate action.

More and more it seems that the world needs anthropologists, not climatologists, to understand the real trajectory of climate change, trends, longterm impacts, "Band-Aid" solutions, and to pinpoint the root

The reason for the magnitude of these fires is complex and certainly requires attention to climate, but it can all be traced back to one thing: How we grow our food.

Fire Begets Food

Humans have been influencing the land and environment for the sake of food for centu-

Australia's landscape did not always look like it does today. Historians and scientists can point back to a time when humans' need for food completely altered the continent's natural

50,000 years ago, Australian Aboriginals used "fire stick farming" as a way to hunt large animals. Equipped with torches, humans burned forests to drive out, trap and kill things

This tactic happened on such an extreme level in Australia that humans were able to drive hairy rhinoceroses, massive birds, giant kangaroos, wombats, and other massive marsuand wildlife.

Sadly, this practice is still in Central African Republic. But a different form of "fire farming" is used on a much larger scale in the 21st century.

The modern global food system is dependent on open land because monocropped cereal grains are at the core of our diets. Growing rows of grain is cost-effective, it can be fed to animals, and it is easily turned into processed food.

The agriculture industry and farmers of every kind have cleared trees at a rate of 5 million hectares a year to make room for crops like corn, wheat, and soy. The easiest ways to do this are either spray the area with an herbicide that kills plants or by lighting fires to burn and clear the land of trees, shrubs, and grasses.

This is called swidden, or slash-and-burn agriculture. It has plagued farmers for centuries and it is exactly what is happening to the Amazon.

Food Begets Fire Setting aside the lasting developmental and health implications of the global diet, the destructive land use practices to achieve this diet are 1) unsustainable and 2) the leading cause of climate change. As the population increases, our need for food production increases. Humans work to grow more food and clear more land. As forests are burned and cleared, carbon is released into the atmosphere and ecosystems are strained. Excess carbon has nowhere to go and increases temperatures. Higher temperatures exacerbate drought and the breakdown of ecosystems and environmental health. It bepials to extinction. Humans for-ever changed Australia's plant Australia's wildfires part of a use today and we've seen it up close in places such as Mali and vicious cycle of food and fire comes harder to grow food in these conditions, so more land is cleared to feed the growing population.

High temperatures and drought also mean wildfires are more likely to burn out of control. This negative feedback loop is cut and dry: fire causes warming, warming causes fire.

In a cruel irony, often the offenders on the ground do not experience the worst of these effects. Weather systems and patterns are liable to change around the world, affecting the most vulnerable people first.

This is true for the smallholder farmers in Trees for the Future's Forest Garden program. Farming families in developing countries are subject to the impacts of climate change with no control over seed supply, no crop insurance, and few municipal programs for a safety net.

Although, there is one major outlier in the disproportionate effects of climate change: Australia. Long-standing climatic predictions have suggested that Australia would be an exception - a developed country facing the dramatic repercussions of man-made climate change, despite its GDP. "The country was founded on genocidal indifference to the native landscape and those who inhabited it, and its modern ambitions have always been precarious: Australia is today a society of expansive abundance, jerryrigged onto a very harsh and ecologically unforgiving land," writes David Wallace-Wells in An Uninhabitable Earth.

Wood Burns, Woods Don't

A healthy forest is full of wood and yet, it cannot burn.

Why? Consider how to build a campfire: A camper needs tinder, kindling, and fuel. Tinder and kindling are critical in turning a spark into a lished, the camper adds fuel to the of record-breaking heat and drought. fire in the form of logs and the logs are able to maintain the burn.

Even in the dry season, where there may be small isolated fires across a dry landscape, a forest should not burn uncontrollably. But today, many forests around the globe are surrounded by "tinder."

A common form of tinder is brush and grassland maintained for grazing animals like cow or sheep. Another is parched crops or what is left behind after harvest: crop residue, the stubble of a cut grain still attached to the Farmers around the globe - American, Iraqi, and Australian - are all too familiar with the danger a lightning storm poses in the dry season. A lightning strike can literally destroy hundreds of acres of a crop or grasslands in a matter of minutes.

Put that field next to a forest during prolonged drought and a spark from a transformer or lightning storm has plenty of dry tinder and kindling to get started.

The Australian fires burning right now are countless. Fires are raging all over the country; bushland, forests, national parks, and farmland now

The country is a veritable tinderbox, and with plenty of fuel in their path, little can be done to stop the fires as they envelope swaths of countryside.

How We Fix It

Food production is the problem, but it's also the solution.

When the agriculture industry and smallholder farmers embrace sustainable farming methods, incorporate trees into the growing process, and find alternatives to monocropping, their impact on the environment will change for the better.

Farmers have historically fought suggestions of man-made climate change because of the implications for their bottom line. But as they start to feel the effects of a warming climate and recognize that land use is a major contributor to the problem, many farmers are turning a corner and becoming climate activists themselves.

In Australia, nonprofit Farmers for Climate Action supports "farmers to build climate and energy literacy and advocate for climate solutions both on and off farm." It's groups like this that will be integral in shifting public understanding and support of a transformational food system.

Trees for the Future works with farmers in sub-Saharan Africa who have long practiced slash-and-burn tactics to clear land for monocrops like maize or peanuts. These farmers are contributing to deforestation, and the prolonged periods of drought they suffer through are evidence that they're feeling the impacts of manmade climate change.

Fortunately, shortly after they integrate trees and sustainability into their farming, these farmers see vast improvements in their soil health, biodiversity, and micro-climates. Abandoning monocrop techniques for agroforestry and regenerative methods also increases their production and incomes - proving that changing the way we farm does not translate to a decrease in profits, but rather the

VP to launch training on economic empowerment to over 3,000 Muslim women in Dar es Salaam

By Guardian Correspondent

VICE President Samia Suluhu Hassan is next week expected to launch the economic empowerment training to more than 3,000 Muslim women in

The training has been organized by the National Muslim Council of Tanzania (BAKWATA) to make them aware of the available opportunity on country's industrialization drive.

According to Dar es Salaam Regional Sheikh Alhadi Mussa Salum, the training seeks to economically empower Muslim women and enable them to achieve the industrial economy.

Sheikh Salum said the training will be free of charge for many women to benefit from it.

"Most of women do not have enough understanding about industrial economy, this is the reason why Bakwata organize the training to provide basic education and awareness on it," Sheikh Salum explained.

He added: "After the training, many women will realize the opportunities available in the country through industrial economy and then will start by engaging themselves in various entrepreneurial activities and establish small scale industries."

He said that working is a part of worshiping for both women and men this is the reason why the religion directed that both have equal right to own property.

"You cannot own property if you're not working of does business, it is not true that Muslim women supposed to stay home," Dar es Salaam regional chief sheikh noted.

According to him, Muslim women are allowed to involve themselves in various development activities but should comply with the religious requirements.

He emphasized that Muslim women are just like other women and where there are opportunities they should explore them and contribute to the industrial economy.

Sheikh Salum said the training will open economic opportunity doors for women especial those with low education level.

He said various topics will be presented on the day by economic and industrial stakeholders will offer different topics, which goes in line with the theme of the day that is 'the Indus-

Mountain porters now to be covered under National Health Insurance

By Correspondent Marc Nkwame, Arusha

THE National Health Insurance Fund (NHIF) is now extending coverage to include porters who carry luggage for mountain trekkers scaling Northern Zone

"We are still widening our scope in reaching out to special groups outside formal employment stables and this time we are including mountain freelance mountain guides and porters," stated the NHIF Director General, Dr Bernard Konga.

Dr Konga was addressing residents of Arusha during special campaigns to sensitize the mass on the importance of enrolling for the National Health Insurance Funding schemes, one of such public meetings was held at Mbauda open market area, in Arusha

The NHIF boss was on view that, Arusha has more than 150 porters, operating at Africa's highest peak, Mount Kilimanjaro, the active Volcanic Mountain of Oldonyo L'engai and the steep terrain Mount Meru.

"Mountain porters work under tough, trying and dangerous environments yet few, if any have any health coverage scheme," pointed out Dr Konga, adding that it was high time for this group to be also brought under

The response of people joining health schemes countrywide is far from being satisfactory, it was stated here that only 34 percent of citizens are covered under such services. Tanzania, with a population of 56 million, has only 4 million members (8 percent) of the National Health Insurance Fund (NHIF).

ing year G-32 KNCI-JVE LTD conducted special health training to their coffee farmers for sustainable health and coffee production. The manager further appealed to coffee growers to practice organic coffee farming for sustainable high quality of coffee production for the good health of consumers.

Ollomi explained that some members of his organization are now enjoying the fruits of organic farming-an agricultural system that uses-ecologically based pest controls and biological fertilizers derived largely from animal and plant wastes and nitrogen-fixing cover crops.

"In the year 2018/19 we engaged with our farmers in the organic coffee market where farmers benefited with high coffee price by emphasizing farmers to switch themselves to organic farming that has led them to a happy life that guarantees them food on table, cash to take care of their children and send them to school," he explained.

According to Ollomi, organic coffees world market is expanding day to day, appealing Kilimanjaro coffee producers to switch themselves to organic farming.

"Apart from high demand of organic coffees in the World market, its production is also very low as farmers are not buying industrial fertilizers in their production, thus they are using only ecologically based pest controls and biological fertilizers derived largely from animal and plant wastes and nitrogen-fixing cover crops.

"In the 2018/19 coffee season we bought a total of 40.2 tons of parchment coffee at a price of 7,125/- per kilogram from small farmers of Mwika Kinyamvuo and Mamba North Agricultural Marketing Co-operatives (AMCOS)...' the G-32 KNCI-JVE LTD General manager enlightened.

Kenya to host Pakistan-Africa Trade Promotion Conference this month

By Guardian Reporter

THE government of Pakistan is hosting Pakistan-Africa Trade/Engage Africa Conference in Kenya's capital, Nairobi on 30-31 January

A statement issued yesterday by High Commission of Pakistan in Dar es Salaam, said: "The aim of the conference is to bring the two sides together for a meaningful exchange in order to enhance Pakistan's trade, investment and economic cooperation with Tanzania as well as other countries in Africa." Pakistan has invited delegates from the public and private sector for more than 20 African Countries. More than 300 delegates from public and private sectors from Pakistan and Africa are expected to participate, the statement reads in

Representatives of Pakistan's private sector business will cover the following, textile and apparel, agro foods such as rice, sugar, and wheat.

It will also cover services such as ICT, travel/insurance, pharmaceuticals, engineering, engineering goods and electronics, surgical goods, cement, sports goods, auto industry and cosmetics.

"The Pakistan High Commission in Dar es Salaam is working on composing a sizeable private sector business delegation in the relevant sectors for participation from Tanzania." The commission called on the interested Tanzanian business persons to take part at the conference. Tanzania and Pakistan have recently expressed their interest in strengthening commercial ties and cooperation to tap a trade potential of USD 1 billion through investments in key sectors such as agriculture, mining and oil and gas.

It is estimated that the current trade volume between both countries stands at USD 100 million and can only grow if economic ties are strengthened.

Since the establishing of diplomatic relations between the two countries in 1967, a strong foundation in different fields of cooperation has been established with the training of Tanzanian diplomats, railway technicians, bankers, and military personnel.

In 2013 Pakistan's former President Mahinda Rajapaksa visited Tanzania's former President Jakaya Kikwete in Dar es Salaam to sign three key agreements on visa exception for diplomatic and state officials, intelligence sharing and cultural and defense cooperation.

Yuan, stocks rally as investors bet on imminent US-China deal signing

SINGAPORE

ASIAN shares rose, China's yuan jumped and safe-harbor assets slipped yesterday, amid signs of goodwill between China and the United States, as the world's two biggest economies prepared to sign a truce in their bitter trade war.

The U.S. Treasury Department on Monday said China should no longer be designated a currency manipulator - a label it applied as the yuan dropped in August.

Beijing, meanwhile, allowed the tightly managed currency to climb to its highest point since July, after fixing the yuan's trading-band midpoint at its firmest in more than five months.

China has also pledged to buy an additional almost $80 billion of U.S. manufactured goods over the next two years, plus more than $50 billion extra in energy supplies, according to a source briefed on a trade deal.

By afternoon the yuan was 0.3 per cent firmer at 6.8740 per dollar, world stocks sat at a record high and the Japanese yen languished at an almost eight-month low.

Futures pointed to a positive start to Europe's trading day and for Wall Street to hold on to Monday's record highs.

The moves come as a Chinese delegation arrived in Washington ahead of Wednesday's signing of the Phase 1 trade agreement, seen as calming a dispute that has upended the world economy.

"There have been a number of false starts," said Vishnu Varathan, head of economics at Mizuho Bank in Singa-

"The fact that this is really coming to the moment when the rubber hits the road is the most tangible evidence of traction in starting to resolve issues, that's what's driving optimism."

Japan's Nikkei added 0.7 per cent to hit its highest in a month. Australian shares rose by the same margin to close at a record.

Hong Kong's Hang Seng and Shanghai blue chips also hit multi-month peaks.

Still, some said stocks could be exposed should the signing process offer any surprises on the downside.

"The market appears to be fully pricing a signed agreement," said CMC Markets' chief strategist in Sydney, Michael McCarthy.

"It's buy the rumor, sell the fact ... Even a delay could see an extremely negative reaction," he said.

United States Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer told Fox Business late on Monday that the Chinese translation of the deal's text was almost done.

"We're going to make it pub-signing," he said.

In tandem with the rally, safe-harbor assets slid lower on Tuesday. Gold extended Monday's fall to trade 0.7 per lic on Wednesday before the cent weaker at $1538.02 per ounce, its lowest in two weeks.

Ten-year Treasury note yields rose to 1.8546 per cent compared with the U.S. close of 1.8480 per cent. [O/R]

In currency markets, the yen weakened past the 110 yen-perdollar mark while the yuan's strength helped lift trade-exposed currencies across Asia. Besides the trade deal, investors are also looking to U.S. inflation data due at 1330 GMT - with consensus expectations for it to hold steady at 0.2 per cent in December - and the beginning of the fourth-quarter

U.S. company results season.

Big banks JPMorgan Chase & Co, Citigroup Inc and Wells Fargo & Co are due to report earnings before market open on Tuesday.

Visa to pay $5.3 billion to buy fintech startup Plaid

NEW YORK

VISA Inc said on Monday it agreed to buy privately held software startup Plaid Inc in a $5.3 billion deal that will boost the payments giant's access to the booming financial technology space.

The transaction highlights how traditional financial firms are willing to pay top dollar to acquire businesses which have established strong positions servicing the digital and cashless economy.

Plaid's technology lets people link their bank accounts to mobile apps such as Venmo, Acorns and Chime, with the San Francisco-based firm saying its systems have been used by one in four people with a

U.S. bank account. The $5.3 billion price given in Monday's statement is double what Plaid was reportedly valued at during its last fundraising, when it took a $250 million Series C round that was announced in December 2018.

It was later revealed by Plaid that both Visa and rival Mastercard Inc were investors in that round.

"Plaid is a leader in the fast growing fintech world," Visa Chairman and CEO Al Kelly said in Monday's state-

"The acquisition, combined with our many fintech efforts already underway, will position Visa to deliver even more value for developers, financial institutions and consumers.'

Founded in 2013 and currently connecting with over 11,000 financial institutions across the United States, Canada and Europe, Plaid will be able to use the acquisition to leverage Visa's global brand in expanding its own business, according to a source familiar with the Visa expects the deal to close in the next three to six months and benefit its adjusted earnings per share at the end of the third year.

Visa said it will fund the deal using cash on hand as well as debt that will be issued at a later date. The acquisition would not impact upon Visa's previously announced stock buyback or dividend plans.

Visa and Plaid respectively used Lazard and Goldman Sachs as their financial advisors.

Consumer confidence unchanged at 2-year low as last traces of Ramaphoria vanish - FNB

JOHANNESBERG

AN index tracking SA consumer confidence has remained unchanged at a 2-year low for the fourth quarter of 2019.

The FNB/BER Consumer Confidence Index came in at -7 index points, below its long-term average reading of +2. It was unchanged from the third quarter

"This suggests a general pessimism among South African households, and this would likely translate into lower consumpquarter of 2019," said Siphamandla Mkhwanazi, a senior economist at FNB.

Mkhwanazi said a sub-index tracking the economic outlook of SA consumers suggests there is a general expectation there tion expenditure in the fourth would be a deterioration in SA's economic prospects over the next 12 months.

"Although still optimistic, consumers are still increasingly becoming wary of their financial standing, and are therefore still unwilling to commit to substan-

FNB said the fact that consumer confidence remained underwater during the fourth quarter suggests that the confidence gains since President Cyril Ramaphosa's election in early 2018 have now been "completely reversed".

"South Africa's grim economic reality has become apparent to consumers.

With economic growth floundering around 0.5% year-on-year since mid-2018 and the debilitat-

China to ramp up US car, aircraft, energy purchases in trade deal - source

WASHINGTON

China to ramp up U.S. car, aircraft, energy purchases in trade deal: source

China has pledged to buy nearly an additional $80 billion of manufactured goods from the United States over the next two years, plus over $50 billion more in energy supplies, according to a source briefed on a trade deal to be signed today.

Aiding a sector that enjoys a rare trade surplus with China, Beijing would also boost purchases of U.S. services by about $35 billion over the same two-year period as it was reported on Monday.

The Phase 1 agreement calls for Chinese purchases of U.S. agricultural goods to increase by some $32 billion over two years, or roughly $16 billion a year, the source said.

When combined with the $24 billion U.S. agricultural export baseline in 2017, the total gets close to the $40 billion annual goal touted by U.S. President Donald Trump.

The $32 billion agriculture increase over 2017 was confirmed by Myron Brilliant, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's head of international affairs, who spoke to reporters on Monday in Beijing. The numbers, expected to be announced on Wednesday at a White House signing ceremony between Trump and Chinese Vice Premier Liu He, represent a staggering increase over recent Chinese imports of U.S. manufactured goods. Two other sources familiar with the Phase 1 trade deal agreed with the rough breakdown of the purchases, without providing specific numbers. A spokesman for the U.S. Trade Representative's office could not immediately be reached for comment. When the Phase 1 trade deal was struck on Dec. 13, U.S. officials said China had agreed to buy $200 billion in additional U.S. farm products, manufactured goods, energy and services over the next two years, compared to the baseline of 2017. They said they would publish targets for the four broad areas, but would keep details of specific products classified to avoid market distortions.

Trump had mainly touted the increased farm exports, which would benefit a major political constituency that has been battered by Chinese retaliatory tariffs during his 18-month trade war with Beijing.

Company executives have been waiting eagerly for details of what other U.S. goods China would be buying more of, aside from farm products, after 18 months of tit-for-tat tariffs that have stalled U.S. business investment.

The $80 billion increase for manufactured goods includes significant purchases of autos, auto parts, aircraft, agricultural machinery, medical devices and semiconductors, said one of the sources, without giving the names of any specific suppliers.

The aircraft would likely be built by Boeing Co, the No. 1 U.S. exporter, whose new sales to China have ground to a halt over the past two years. That would be a welcome shot-in-the arm for the planemaker, which has seen shares and earnings plummet as its best-selling 737 MAX aircraft remains grounded due to two fatal crashes in 2018 and 2019.

The source providing the purchase figures expressed skepticism about manufactured goods pledges by Beijing since the U.S.-China trade deal does not address any of the non-tariff barriers that have kept these U.S. goods out of the Chinese market for decades, including procurement rules, product standards and subsidies to Chinese state-owned firms.

With Chinese car sales flagging and excess domestic assembly capacity on the rise, it's difficult to see the need for China to purchase significantly more U.S.-built cars. Among the most popular U.S.-built vehicles sold in China are BMWand Mercedes-Benz sport-utility vehicles.

China also has major industrial policy goals to dominate the very manufacturing sectors in which it has pledged to pump up purchases of U.S. goods, further fueling

U.S. officials describe as an important enforcement clause in the deal.

That enforcement mechanism allows grievances to be aired through escalating consultations that would reach Chinese Vice Premier Liu He and U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer.

If a U.S. claim of Chinese non-compliance cannot be resolved, Washington would have the right to reimpose tariffs on Chinese goods in proportion to the economic damage alleged. But nothing would preclude China from retaliating, returning the two sides to the current status quo, people familiar with the deal said.

Lighthizer on Monday called the deal a "huge step forward" for U.S.-China trade relations and "a really, really good deal for the United States." He told Fox Business Network that Beijing's compliance would be monitored closely.

"We expect them to live up to the letter of the law. We'll bring cases, we'll bring actions against them if they don't," Light-

Iran announces arrests over plane disaster as protests rage on

DUBAI/TEHRAN

IRAN said yesterday it had arrested an undisclosed number of suspects accused of a role in shooting down a Ukrainian airliner, as anti-government demonstrations triggered by the disaster entered a fourth day.

Wednesday's shooting down of Ukraine International Airlines flight 752, killing all 176 people on board, has led to one of the greatest public challenges to Iran's clerical rulers since they came to power in the Islamic Revolution of 1979.

After days of denying blame, Iran acknowledged on Saturday it had shot the plane down during a state of high alert, hours after it had fired missiles at US targets in Iraq to retaliate for the killing of Iran's most powerful military commander.

Protesters, with students at the forefront, have held demonstrations against the establishment since Saturday, some met by a violent police

Video from inside Iran has shown wounded people being carried, pools of blood on the streets and the sound of gunfire. The overall level of unrest is difficult to assess because of restrictions on independent reporting.

President Hassan Rouhani promised a thorough investigation into the "unforgiveable error" of shooting down the plane, giving a television address on Tuesday, the latest in a series of apologies from a leadership that rarely admits mistakes.

Rouhani urged the judiciary to form a "special court with a senior judge and tens of experts" to investigate the crash, Xinhua reports.

Iran's judiciary spokesman Gholamhossein Esmaili said some of those accused of having a role in the plane disaster had already been arrested. He did not identify the suspects or say how many had been held.

Most of those on board the flight were Iranians or dual nationals. Canada, Ukraine, Britain and other nations who had citizens on the plane have scheduled a meeting on Thursday in London to consider legal action against Tehran.

'CLERICS GET LOST!'

The disaster and subsequent unrest comes amid one of the biggest escalations between Tehran and Washington since the revolution four decades ago that made them into foes.

Tit-for-tat military strikes began with missiles launched at a US base news agency reported.

Debris is seen from an Ukrainian plane which crashed as authorities work at the scene in Shahedshahr, southwest of the capital Tehran, Iran, Jan 8, 2020. (AP) that killed an American contractor in December, and reached their climax when Washington killed the architect of Iran's regional network of proxy militia, Oassem Soleimani, in a drone strike in Baghdad on Jan 3.

Iran's government was already in a precarious position, with sanctions imposed by the United States having hammered its conomy, causing public anger.

The authorities killed hundreds of demonstrators in a crackdown two months ago, in what was probably the worst anti-government unrest since the revolution. Across the region, governments that include armed Iran-allied factions have also faced months of hostile mass demonstrations in Iraq and Lebanon.

In recent days, demonstrators have chanted "Clerics get lost!" and other slogans against Iran's system of theocratic rule. "Death to Khamenei," others shouted, referring to Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, supreme leader for more than 30 years.

Riot police have beaten some demonstrators with batons, social media posts show. Gunfire has also been heard, although police have denied shooting at protesters.

The most recent video posted on social media showed protesters gathered into the night in Tehran and other cities, and burning images of Soleimani.

Esmaili said Tuesday around 30 protesters have been arrested, the semi-official Tasnim 'FIRST STEP'

"Iranian armed forces admitting their mistake is a good first step," Rouhani said in Tuesday's address. He said those responsible would be punished and the government would be accountable to Iranians and those nations who lost citizens.

Rouhani noted that the issue could not be blamed on a single person's error by pushing a button and hitting the plane, Xinhua reports. "There are others (involved in the incident) and I want it to be sincerely explained to the people," he stressed.

Ukraine's foreign minister said "grieving nations", five of the countries whose citizens were killed when an airliner was shot down, would meet on Thursday.

"We will meet in person in London to discuss the ways, including legal, (for) how we are following this up," Vadym Prystaiko said on Monday.

Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, whose nation had at least 57 citizens on the flight, told Global News TV that victims would still be alive and at home with their families now if there had been no tensions in the region.

According to a transcript, Trudeau said Canada did not receive a heads up before the United States killed Soleimani.

"The US makes its determinations. We attempt to work as an international community on big issues. But sometimes countries take actions without informing their allies," he said

Russian top diplomat: No final results achieved at talks on Libya in Moscow

COLOMBO

NO final results on the settlement in Libya have been achieved at the talks in Moscow, but efforts will continue, Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov told reporters at a news conference yesterday.

"We will push ahead with efforts in this direction, no fi nal results have been achieved so far," he said. Moscow is proposing piecing together actions taken by key actors to achieve settlement in Libya.

"All efforts now taken by Europeans including Germans, the French, Italians, the efforts by Libyan neighbors - Algeria, Egypt - as well as the UAE, Turkey, Qatar and Russia, we want to piece them all together so that everyone acts in one direction and urges all Libyan parties to reach agreements rather than sort things out militarily," he said.

Lavrov (pictured) also said that extremists are moving from Syria's Idlib to Libya for destabilizing the situation in the North African country.

"There are the remaining hotbeds of terrorist activity, namely in Idlib, where extremists have been losing ground," Lavrov said. "But unfortunately, if we speak about ties between Syria and Libya, they [terrorists] are largely moving to Libya in order to continue stirring the pot in that country."

Russia's top diplomat noted that some 90% of the country's territory is currently under control of the legitimate Syrian government and Assad's forces have been gaining

"Certainly, the task for the future is to iron out problems in northeastern Syria, which are mainly caused by illegal presence of US forces there who have been actively encouraging separatism on the right bank of the Euphrates,' Lavrov said.

Lavrov emphasized that the situation in Syria is much better than in Libya because the political settlement process is underway in the Arab republic. This became possible since all parties to the conflict have a responsible approach, he explained.

On January 12, a ceasefire in Libya proposed by the Russian and Turkish Presidents Vladimir Putin and Recep Tayyip Erdogan as part of a larger initiative to achieve peace in the country entered into force at midnight.

The ceasefire's objective is to stop hostilities between the Libyan National Army (LNA) led by Field Marshal Khalifa Haftar and Fayez al-Sarraj's Government of National Accord (GNA) sitting in Tripoli.

On Monday, representatives of the parties to the conflict arrived in Moscow for talks after which GNA envoys signed a ceasefire agreement.

Haftar took a pause to study the agreement. However, later he left Moscow without putting his signature under the document, Arab media outlets reported.

In the early hours of January 14, armed clashes reerupted in south Tripoli - the target of a decisive offensive declared by Haftar in December. The LNA issued a statement declaring "readiness and determination to achieve

Technology takes pressure off China's Spring Festival travel rush

BEIJING

MILLIONS of Chinese are travelling smarter, faster, more efficiently and more comfortably than ever before after one of the world's largest human migrations got underway last Friday.

And the travel choices for the 2020 Spring Festival travel rush are also more diverse with a comprehensive transport system covering road, rail, water and air.

The travel rush, which sees families and friends reunite around the country for China's most important traditional holiday, began 15 days ahead of the Spring Festival, or Chinese Lunar New Year, which falls on Jan. 25 this year.

The high-speed rail link between Beijing and Zhangjiakou, co-host city of the Beijing 2022 Winter Olympics in north China's Hebei Province, started operating on Dec. 30 last year.

The travel time between the two cities has been greatly shortened, and Zhangjiakou is now with Beijing's onehour economic circle, said Li Shengwu, head of the Infrastructure Development Department of Zhangjiakou Development and Reform Commis-

Wang spoke highly of the comprehensive strategic cooperative partnership between China and Zimbabwe, saying that during the period of struggle for national liberation, China and Zimbabwe were close brothers who fought side by side; and during the current national construction process, the two countries are mutually beneficial and win-win partners.

Wang believed the southern African country has a bright future, noting

China supports Zimbabwe in speeding up the pace of reform and in exploring the road to development in line with its own national conditions.

He also stressed that China is willing to share its experience in economic and social development and governance with Zimbabwe with no reservation, and continue to provide assistance and support within its ca-

Wang urged the two sides to closely coordinate and cooperate in multilateral affairs, and jointly oppose unilateralism and bullying.

A core part of the "eight verticals and eight horizontals" rail network, the Beijing-Zhangjiakou high-speed service connects with the Zhangjiakou-Hohhot and Datong-Zhangjiakou high-speed lines, helping to reduce the holiday travel pressure in Beijing, eastern Inner Mongolia, Shanxi Province and northern Hebei Province. Travel is becoming more efficient for travelers this Spring Festival, who are expected to make 3.6 billion trips during the period.

Ticket sale is the first big test. Rapid technological development has accelerated online ticket sales and ticket checking. In the 2020 holiday rush, the daily ticketing capacity of the official 12306 online booking service will increase from 15 million to 20 million.

Ticket checking is faster as e-tickets are quickly replacing paper tickets. The checking of e-tickets, a service now available at all high-speed railway stations, takes 30 percent less time compared with manual checking of paper tickets. Facial recognition technology has also been used in some stations to speed up the ticket checking

Passengers prepare to board a train at Beijing North Railway Station in Beijing, capital of China, Jan. 10, 2020. China, the world's most populated country, on Friday ushered in its largest annual migration, 15 days ahead of the Spring Festival, or the Lunar New Year. There will be three billion trips during the travel rush from Jan. 10 to Feb. 18 for family reunions and travel, slightly up from that of last year, according to a forecast from the National Development and Reform Commission (NDRC). (Xinhua)

.Travel services are also becoming more intelligent with robot information services and intelligent storage facilities further improving

In recent years, stations with heavy traffic such as the southern city of Guangzhou and the northwestern city of Xi'an have been using patrol robots for security. The robot can be on duty 24 hours a day in all weathers and check potential risks to prevent fire and other safety problems.

Artificial intelligence (AI) security monitoring is realizing real-time analysis and early warning of passenger flows, so authorities can effectively prevent stampedes and other safety issues during the travel rush.

The Beijing-Zhangjiakou railway is the first intelligent high-speed service with scientific and technological elements inside and out.

The carriages offer 5G signal, wireless charging, intelligent light adjustment, stepless color-changing windows, blind guidance and other functions.

They also have adjustable seats and ski equipment cabinets, and can receive live broadcasts from the 2022 Winter Olympics.

The in-depth application of big data, AI and 5G technologies promises to usher in more newgeneration intelligent vehicles such as self-driving vehicles, ultra-high-speed trains, unmanned aerial vehicles and intelligent ships.

Malawi judges expose bribery attempts in election case, says report

LILONGWE

JUDGES handling the election case in which Malawi opposition petitioned for the nullification of the May presidential election results have exposed bribery attempts by some quarters to have the case ruled in their favor.

According to the local media, the news broke out when one of the five judges handling the case was approached by some quarters with the bribery, and he reported it to the Chief Justice, Andrew Nyirenda, who in turn lodged a formal complaint to the Anti-Corruption Bureau (ACB).

The ACB Executive Director, Ryneck Matemba, confirmed to the local media Sunday that he had indeed received the complaint from the Chief Justice on attempted bribery by some individuals but the ACB chief said it was too early to shed more light.

"I can confirm that the Anti-Corruption Bureau received written complaint from the Chief Justice on a matter related to the presidential election case that is pending judgment in the constitutional court," the ACB chief was quoted by the local media. "We cannot, however, disclose any further details of the complaint," Matemba was further quoted, adding that "suffice it to say the ACB is pursuing this particular complaint as well as other written complaints that we also received from different sources and stakeholders.'

The ACB chief added that the complaints received were not against any political parties or any of the parties to the presidential election case but against specific individuals.

According to the local media, which quoted sources close to the case, a politician is said to have used renowned business man to channel some cash to the judges through another senior connection in the highest ranks within the judiciary

Gambia opens a consulate general in Dakhla

DAKHLA

THE Republic of the Gambia opened Tuesday a Consulate General in the southern city of Dakhla in Morocco. The inauguration ceremony was chaired by minister of Foreign Affairs, African Cooperation and Moroccans living abroad, Nasser Bourita, and his Gambian counterpart, Mamadou Tangara.

The opening of the Gambian Consulate General in the southern provinces of the Kingdom is in line with the consistent position of this African country vis-à-vis the Moroccan Sahara issue, Bourita said at a joint press briefing with his Gambian counterpart. The Gambia has always southern provinces, to express their supsupported the international legitimacy and historical rights of the Kingdom in all regional and international fora, he said.

He also stressed the importance of this event in the history of the solid and longstanding relations between Morocco and the Gambia; there are strong links, which have undergone a great evolution in recent years, recalling in this regard the holding of the joint commission soon in Banjul where a series of agreements will be signed in different domains. Many countries are interested in opening diplomatic representations in the port for the Moroccan Sahara, he noted. adding that other consulates will be inaugurated in Dakhla and Laayoune by African and non-African countries.

He underlined that this decision also reinforces the positive momentum of the national cause on the international scene through the constant support expressed by several countries to the Moroccan Sa-

In addition to its political significance, the opening of these diplomatic representations constitutes a lever for the development of commercial and economic exchanges between Morocco and these Morocco". countries, he said.

For his part, the Gambian minister of Foreign Affairs stressed that the decision to open a Consulate General in Dakhla is an act of sovereignty in accordance with diplomatic rules and customs, adding that this act is in line with the logic pursued by the Gambia since its independence, namely the recognition of the Moroccanness of the Sahara.

In this vein, he reiterated the position of the Gambia, which "has never suffered any ambiguity on the issue of the Moroccan Sahara and the territorial integrity of Tangara also pointed out that this opening is a "historic event," given that the Gambia is the first African country to have inaugurated a diplomatic representation in this city, noting that "this is only the beginning of a very strong dynamism of cooperation between the two countries," especially after the opening of a Gambian embassy in Rabat and an honorary consulate in Casablanca.

The Kingdom of Morocco effectively exercises its sovereignty over its Sahara and the Gambia's decision to open a consular representation in this region of the Kingdom is in line with the positions expressed by this State at the UN General Assembly and other international fora backing Morocco's territorial integrity, he stressed.

The Gambian FM underlined that "any criticism of this decision represents an interference in the diplomatic relations between two sovereign African nations, Morocco and the Gambia." Last June, Côte d'Ivoire opened an honorary consulate in Laayoune and in December, the Union of the Comoros inaugurated a consulate general in the same city.

China and Myanmar write a new chapter of jointly building the Belt and Road

CHINESE President Xi Jinping's state visit to Myanmar, scheduled from January 17 to 18, is expected to deepen the high-quality Belt and Road Initiative (BRI) cooperation and promote the China-Myanmar Economic Corridor (CMEC) from conceptual planning to construction.

As a landmark project between the two countries, the economic corridor is bound to form a three-pillar giant cooperation pattern, boost connectivity among large projects along the routes, and benefit both countries and peoples.

Myanmar is an important partner of China to jointly build the Belt and Road Initiative. With complementary advantages, China and Myanmar boast huge potential for cooperation. Leaders of the two countries have drawn up blueprint for the BRI construction on many bilateral and multilateral occasions.

Myanmar attaches great importance to the BRI. Many cooperative mechanisms and platforms have been established under the Initiative, such as the joint committee for Myanmar-China Economic, Trade and Technical Cooperation, the joint committee for the CMEC, and the CMEC Forum, and the Steering Committee for the Implementation of BRI, which was firstly held in February, 2019.

The 21st century is the one featuring Myanmar Institute of Strategic and International Studies, adding that the insightful BRI proposed by China, which aims to strengthen interconnectivity, suits the trend of the world.

As a demonstration and prototype project of the BRI, the China-Myanmar oil and gas pipeline project has brought significant changes to Kyaukpyu, a town in Rakhine State, western Myan-

The town was only provided with electricity two or three hours every day and it was expensive for independent power producers to generate electricity, said a local working in hotel man-

With the project, about 602,700 cubic meters of gas is transported to the power plants in Kyaukpyu every day, providing electricity for the locals 24 hours each day at a much lower cost.

The China-Myanmar oil and gas pipeline project has not only enabled Myanmar to make monetary gain by exporting gas overseas, but has boosted the employment at home.

It has brought direct economic benefits of $520 million for Myanmar by November 30, 2019.

With a batch of down-to-earth projects, Chinese companies have improved the economic and social conditions for Myanmar to secure greater economic growth.

While villagers at Mon State, south Myanmar, have gained access to household appliances like refrigerators and televisions, those from over 30 villages near the Chinese-constructed Letpadaung Copper Mine have become better-off.

Myanmar has poor infrastructure, yet the development of rural areas especially depends on infrastructure construction, said Dr Nay Lin, chairman of Myanmar Alinyaung (Brightness) Foundation (MAF).

He pointed out that many cities in Myanmar, Rangoon for one, have greatly improved the infrastructure since Myanmar became a part of the BRI construction.

More highways have been built and some projects have helped the rural residents to make more money, he noted, adding that the country has developed in the highest level with the smallest cost thanks to the BRI.

In November 2017, China proposed building the China-Myanmar Economic Corridor to form a large cooperation globalization and connectivity, said Dr. pattern between the two countries. Khin Maung Nyunt, Senior Research One month later, leaders from the Fellow of Myanmar Development In- two countries reached an important | tion." stitute (MDI),a researcher with the consensus on building the economic corridor, from where the corridor has entered a period of fast development.

> China and Myanmar signed a memorandum of understanding on building the CMEC in September 2018.

> The CMEC has actually benefitted Myanmar. The country's economic growth rate is estimated at 7 percent from the fiscal year of 2019 to 2020 as the CMEC has stimulated the transportation and tourism in Myanmar, according to a report on the income and expenditure of the country, as reported by the Burmese media.

> The CMEC has not only helped the areas along the corridor to build their own industrial system, but has also boosted relevant industries such as transportation and improved the local education and science and technology, noted U Thit Linn Ohn, former Ambassador of Myanmar to China.

He added that Myanmar hopes to put into practice the cooperative projects under the CMEC to benefit the people of the two countries.

African countries contribute 141 mln USD to continental peace fund

ADDIS ABABA

THE African Union (AU) Commission on Tuesday disclosed that the financial contribution from AU member countries to the AU Peace Fund has surpassed 141 million U.S. dollars during the past three years period.

The statement was made by the Chairperson of the 55-member pan African bloc Moussa Faki Mahamat on Tuesday, as he announced that the AU member states have "contributed 141 million U.S. dollars to the AU Peace Fund in less than three years." "Solid progress is being made in delivering on the 2015 Assembly decisions on financial autonomy," the AU Commission chairperson said during an ongoing high-level retreat on the operationalization of the AU Peace

Mahamat also stressed that "the full operationalization of the African Union Peace Fund in 2020 is one the top priorities that I will personally lead

According to Mahamat, the growing financial contribution "demonstrates AU member states' commitment to ensuring predictable and sustainable financing for peace and security activities in Africa."

The AU Commission Chairperson also stressed that the financial contribution to the AU Peace Fund is expected to "gradually increase to 400 million U.S. dollars by 2021."

The AU, which aspires the Peace Fund to finance activities in three thematic areas that include mediation and preventive diplomacy, institutional capacity and peace support operations, envisaged that the continental Peace Fund, once fully operational, would "become the principal financing instrument for peace and security activities on the continent." Russia ready to help establish dialogue between US and Iran, Lavrov says

Moscow is ready to contribute to launching dialogue between Washington and Tehran if the sides show interest in this, Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov told a news conference yesterday.

"We are calling on the US and Iran to show restraint and solve all problems through dialogue," Lavrov said. "Many tried and continue trying to contribute to launching contacts between the United States and Iran to ease tensions," he said, stressing: "[We] are also ready to help if the sides show a real interest in this."

Meanwhile, Russia's top diplomat emphasized that Moscow was not going to meddle in the ties between the United States and Iran. "By meddling, as you said, in US-Iranian relations I mean some physical actions.".

Escalation Persian Gulf

Russia is in opposition to escalation of tensions in the Persian Gulf region whatever the side responsible for it, Lavrov said.

According to him, "no one can be satisfied with what is unfolding in the Persian Gulf region where tensions and nervousness are cranked up, which are already manifesting in actions, people are dying from it."

"We cannot turn a blind eye to the fact that it all started the moment when the United States announced a few years ago that "all problems and woes of the region arise from Iran's activities, that Iran is the main terrorist" even though no one can prove this and "that Iran should stop exercising influence over what is happening around its borders," the minister underlined.

Parallel to that, Lavrov continued, "the US tore up its obligations to the JCPOA (Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action on the Iranian nuclear program - TASS), started punishing everyone engaged in legitimate trade with Iran with sanctions which also led to significant heightening of tensions."

"We understand Sri Lanka's concern that a conflict in the Persian gulf region can take its toll on exports of traditional goods, not only Sri Lankan manufacturers will suffer," the top Russian diplomat noted. "The Persian Gulf of a place where transport arteries are running through and that has strategic significance for international trade, particularly the energy source

France, West Africa to unite forces in fight against Islamist militants

PARIS

FRANCE and five West African states agreed on Monday to combine their military forces under one command structure to fight a growing Islamist militancy in the Sahel region, with Paris committing an extra 220 troops.

French President Emmanuel Macron had called the leaders of Mali, Burkina Faso, Chad, Niger and Mauritania, known as the G5, to the southwestern French town of Pau to discuss the battle against insurgents in the Sahel, an arid region just below the Sahara de-

With growing anti-French sentiment in the five countries over Paris' handling of an insurgency by Islamist militants that has seen hundreds of their soldiers killed in recent weeks, Macron had warned that he could withdraw French troops without a clear political commitment from them.

France, the former colonial power, has 4,500 troops in Mali and the wider Sahel, but security has been progressively worsening. Macron said the situation had now been clarified.

Militants linked to al Qaeda and Islamic State have strengthened their foothold, making large swathes of territory ungovernable and stoking ethnic violence, especially in Mali and Burkina

"Today, more than ever, the fact is that the results, despite the effort, are below the expectations of the population," Burkina Faso President Roch Marc Kabore told a joint news conference. "It's for this reason that we have decided to review the deployment and redefine the pillars for our future action for the Sahel, brings the G5 states, French forces and any future troops under a single command. It aims to enable joint operations, greater intelligence-sharing and quicker response time in particular for French forces in the border areas linking Niger, Mali and Burkina Faso, where the insurgency is at its worst.

Concerns over United States pres-

Criticised in France for allowing French troops to get bogged down and facing growing hostility in West Africa for failing to restore stability, Macron has become increasingly frustrated, but the French leader appeared satisfied with Monday's results.

Another 220 French troops will be sent to give fresh momentum to the fight with more European special forces expected to join in the coming months, he said.

"The priority is Islamic State in the Grand Sahara. ... It is our priority because it is the most dangerous," Macron said. "We have no choice, we need results."

French troops were hailed as heroes in 2013 when their intervention helped prevent an Islamist militant push to the Malian capital, Bamako.

But their standing has slipped as the security situation deteriorated. At least 89 local soldiers were killed in a suspected jihadist attack on an army base in Niger this weekend, four security sources said.

Pau, the location of the summit, is home to a helicopter regiment which saw several of its French soldiers killed in a helicopter collision in Mali in November. Macron said he was also worried of a possible withdrawal by the United States military in the area. It provides intelligence, logistical and drone support for France's forces. There have been mixed signals from Washington that it could pull out.

"If the Americans were to decide to leave Africa it would be really bad news for us," Macron said. "I hope to be able to convince President (Donald) Trump that the fight against terrorism also plays out in this region." Xinhua

Pompeo: Soleimani killing part of new strategy to deter US foes

WASHINGTON

US Secretary of State Mike Pompeo on Monday said Qassem Soleimani was killed as part of a broader strategy of deterring challenges by US foes that also applies to Russia, further diluting the assertion that the top Iranian general was struck because he was plotting imminent attacks on US targets.

In his speech at Stanford University's Hoover Institute, Pompeo (pictured) made no mention of the threat of imminent attacks planned by Soleimani. It only was in response to a question that he repeated his earlier assertion that pre-empting such plots was the reason for the Jan 3 American drone strike on Iran's second most powerful His speech, "The Restoration of focused on what he called an administration strategy to establish "real deterrence" against Iran following earlier Republican and Democratic policies that encouraged Tehran's "malign activity." Democratic and some Republican lawmakers have challenged the administration over the self-defense rationale supported by undisclosed intelligence over imminent attacks. US President Donald Trump has said the potential targets included four US embassies.

On Sunday, Defense Secretary Mark Esper said he had seen no intelligence forewarning of imminent attacks on embassies. Trump on Monday added new fuel to the controversy by saying "it really doesn't matter" whether Soleimani posed an imminent threat.

Pompeo said there was "a bigger strategy" behind the killing of Soleimani, the commander of the Quds Force, Iran's elite foreign espionage and paramilitary force.

"President Trump and those of us in his national security team are reestablishing deterrence - real deterrence against the Islamic Republic of Iran," he said.

"Your adversary must understand not only that you have the capacity to impose cost but that you're in fact willing to do so," Pompeo said, adding that the 2015 Iranian nuclear deal from which Trump withdrew in 2018 had emboldened Tehran.

"America now enjoys the greatest position of strength regarding Iran we've ever been in," he said, pointing to the damage done to the Iranian economy by US sanctions that Trump re-imposed following his withdrawal from the nuclear deal.

"The importance of deterrence isn't confined to Iran," Pompeo said. "In all cases, we must deter foes to defend freedom. That's the whole point of President Trump's work to make our military the strongest it's ever been."

He cited the resumption of lethal military aid to Ukraine for defense against Russia-backed separatists, Trump's withdrawal from an arms control accord with Moscow and tests Agencies

THE Chinese economy has come under international spotlight at the beginning of 2020. "China will outperform expectations in 2020." "Economists are optimistic on China's growth prospects." "Eye-catching figures indicate China's economic achievements." It is commonly acknowledged by the international society that pressured by rising domestic and external risks and challenges, China's economy demonstrates bright prospects. It's universally recognized that the momentum of steady growth for China's economy has never changed and will be an underlying trend going forward. The recent Global Economic Prospects released by the World Bank indicated that China's economy maintained resilient under the support of the robust growth of disposal income, and the economic growth was one of the fastest in the world.

Against the backdrop of a sluggish world economy, China will still be the leading engine of global economic growth, Russia's Sputnik news agency reported. U.S. media pointed out that strong survey data indicated that China's economic growth is better than expected, which has given hope to other export-oriented economies in the region.

China's economic stability and progress remain unchanged, which could be attributed to the solid foundation laid by long-term development. The total retail sales of consumer goods in China in 2019 is expected to exceed 40 trillion yuan for the first time, and consumption will contribute more than 60 percent to economic growth, becoming the first driving force for economic growth for six consecutive years.

The purchasing managers' index for China's manufacturing sector has firmed up, with manufacturing confidence continuing to rise. In 2019, China's GDP is expected to hit 100 trillion yuan.

It has been generally noted that this means that China's per capita GDP will reach $10,000. The huge volume serves as the basis for China's economic development and the high-quality development shows the resilience of the Chinese economy. Foreign media praised that the Chinese economy is picking up in the headwind.

Reform and opening-up has been further advanced, so that China's economy is full of new vitality. China's economy faces challenges, but these challenges can be overcome. As observed by the outside world, China faces up to the problem of imbalanced and inadequate development, thoroughly implements the new development concept, and constantly translates external pressure into the powerful motivation for deepening reform and expanding opening up. As a result, its economic structure has become more effective, sustainable and innovative.

In the face of the uncertainty brought by protectionism, China continues to improve the business environment, continuously reduces the overall level of tariffs, and demonstrates its determination to share the huge dividends of its market with nearly 1.4 billion people with the world.

"From the investment perspective, China has always been the most attractive place." The words by heads of transnational corporations manifested their confidence in the Chinese economy. Stephen Perry, chairman of the 48 Group Club in the UK, believes that opening-up has done wonders for China and will create even greater wonders.

From being optimistic about to relying more heavily on the Chinese economy, the world is under stronger influence of China's economy. A recent poll conducted by the Pew Research Center in the U.S. showed that people in many countries around the world have a positive view of China's economic pointed out that the main source of global economic growth in the past decade has been China. China has created the most unusual economic development story in human history and it will continue to do so in the next decade.

Japanese media have observed that more and more graduates from the country consider China's rapid growth attractive and set their sights on job hunting in China. The positive energy injected into world development by China has attracted much attention, seen both from global macro-economic analysis and individual feelings of foreigners.

2020 is a year in which China will win the battle against extreme poverty, build a moderately prosperous society in all respects, and achieve its first centenary goal. It is a landmark year in the history of China and the world.

From whichever direction the winds leap, China remains strong. Faced with instability and uncertainty in the external environment, the Chinese economy has withstood the test and sharpened its strength and resilience.

In 2020, China is a force that the world can rely on, said a scholar of international politics based in Berlin, Germany, expressing the world's confidence in and expectations for China's development. It is believed that the giant ship of the Chinese economy that sails along the tide of economic globalization is indestructible. Combining its own development in the great cause of global common development, China conforms to the trend of the times.

Beyoncé snubbed at Oscars; Elton John, Randy Newman get nods

BEYONCE's "Spirit" from "The Lion King" didn't roar loud enough for the Academy Awards: The song didn't earn a nomination for best original song, though Randy Newman, Elton John and the husband-wife duo Kristen Anderson-Lopez and Robert Lopez have a chance at winning another Oscar for songwriting.

Rounding out the five nominees for best original song are Diane Warren, earning her 11th bid with no wins, and Cynthia Erivo, who also picked up a nomination for best actress for "Harriet."

Beyoncé's "Spirit" was nominated for best original song at this month's Golden Globes, but lost to John and Bernie Taupin's "(I'm Gonna) Love Me Again" from "Rocketman." John, who is nominated with Taupin, won an Academy Award with Tim Rice for "Can You Feel the Love Tonight" from the original "The Lion King."

Newman has won two Oscars for best original song – for "If I Didn't Have You" from "Monsters, Inc." and "We Belong Together" from "Toy Story 3." This year he's a double nominee: He's up for best original score with "Marriage Story" and best original song with "I Can't Let You Throw Yourself Away" from Toy Story 4," which is up for best animated Monty" at the 1998 Academy Awards.

"Frozen 2" didn't make it in the latter category, but the Lopez's song from the film, "Into the Unknown," is up for best original song. The duo picked Oscars for the ubiquitous hit "Let It Go" from "Frozen" and "Remember Me" from "Coco."

Erivo follows in the footsteps of Lady Gaga and Mary J. Blige – stars who were nominated for both acting and music trophies in the same year at the Academy Awards. Erivo shares her best original song nomination for "Stand Up" from "Harriet" with Joshuah Brian Campbell and the bid brings her closer to EGOT status since she's already won an Emmy, Grammy and Tony for her work in Broadway's "The Color Purple.'

Warren could finally win an Oscar with her 11th try: She's nominated for "I'm Standing with You" from the Christian drama "Breakthrough." The song is performed by the film's star, "This Is Us" actress Chrissy

Nominees joining Newman for best original score are Alexandre Desplat for "Little Women," Thomas Newman for "1917," John Williams for "Star Wars: The Rise of Skywalker" and Hildur Guðnadóttir for "Joker." If Guðnadóttir wins, she could the first woman to do so since Anne Dudley picked up best original score for "The Full

LeBron's 31 now put Lakers past Cavs 128-99 for 9th straight win

KEVIN Love and LeBron James hadn't played against each other since before they got together on the Cleveland Cavaliers in 2014 for a memorable four-year partnership. After their first meeting since James moved to the West Coast ended in a blowout win for the Lakers, they got together on court with Tristan Thompson to renew a friendship that's bigger

"That's a brotherhood," Love said. "That's a bond that can never be broken. You saw Tristan and myself out there with him. That's something we'll always remember and kind of take to our graves. He's my brother for life, and it is weird playing against him."

These three champions' connection is rock-solid, even after a game that demonstrated why only James is contending for another ring this year.

James scored 23 of his 31 points in a dominant second half, and Dwight Howard added season highs of 21 points and 15 rebounds in Los Angeles' ninth consecutive victory, 128-99 over the Cavs on Monday night.

The powerhouse Lakers posted their highest-scoring half in 33 years while scoring 81 in the second half behind James, who added eight assists while passing Isiah Thomas for sole possession of eighth place on the NBA's career list. James led Los Angeles to its third straight win without Anthony Davis, who is out with a bruised backside "Defensively, we got stops, and we had great pace," James said. "Even when they scored, we got the ball out and continued to play with pace. We played with a lot of balance.' James hasn't been gone from Cleveland long enough to forget about his connection with Love or his spirited practice competitions with Thompson. The Cavaliers who stayed behind recognize their old teammate's steady brilliance, but they also see the improved aspects to James'

Thompson guarded James for long stretches, just like he would in scrimmages back in Cleveland. James still went 12 for 16, and he quarterbacked the Lakers' up-tempo offense to perfection in the second half.

"He made some 3s to get himself going, but he did a good job of getting his teammates involved," Thompson said. "I accept the challenge. It's fun playing against the best player of our generation, and probably one of the best of all time. I love it."

Love had 21 points and 11 rebounds for Cleveland in the third stop of a six-game road stretch. Two days after the Cavs posted a surprising win at powerhouse Denver, they couldn't keep up with a franchise icon who hasn't slowed down.

Returning from a one-game absence with an apparent case of the flu, James improved to 2-0 against the Cavaliers since he departed for the second time in 2018. James had 32 points and 14 rebounds in his return to Cleveland in November 2018, and he was injured last January when the Cavs beat the Lakers at Staples Center.

Thompson had 17 points and 10 rebounds for Cleveland, while Collin Sexton and Darius Garland added 16 points apiece. Cleveland jumped to a 14-point lead in the first half while most of the Lakers played listlessly, but Los Angeles ran away from the middle of the second quarter onward. "When the pendulum began to swing, we couldn't stop it," Cleveland coach John Beilein said. "LeBron took charge, just like he always has for a long time."

Meanwhile, in Boston, Jayson Tatum didn't hesitate when asked about the team's chemistry nearly halfway into the season. "It's a lot of fun when everybody's contributing. Guys are genuinely happy for one another's success," he said after the Boston Celtics coasted to a 113-101 victory over the Chicago Bulls on Monday night.

Talking points from 2020 Mapinduzi Cup final

By Correspondent Michael Mwebe

MTIBWA Sugar were crowned 2020 Mapinduzi Cup champions after they had defeated Simba 1-0 at the Amaan Stadium on Monday night in Zanzibar.

The Guardian takes a look at the four talking points from the Monday night final

Awadh Juma is proving to be the best signing for Mtibwa Sugar this season. The former African Lyon midfielder scored the all important goal for the millers to help them win the Mapinduzi Cup.

He scored with a composed finish and that was perhaps the least impressive part of his performance as he ran the midfield well with his clever movement and fantastic work

Despite only finding the net on three occasions this season, all of those goals have been winners. He scored the only goal in Mtibwa Sugar 1-0 victory against Mbao in their last league assignment. He had also scored in a 1-0 win over Mwadui.

He set his side in such a way that despite Simba dominating possession for the majority of the match they scarcely threatened, other than a few fleeting opportunities.

Just like in Simba's Mainland Premier League game against Yanga where the latter's coach Boniface Mkwasa came top in the tactical battle, once again, Simba head coach Sven Vandenbroeck was outsmarted

Ndemla fails to grasp rare starting opportunity

It is not always that Said Ndemla gets to start for Simba. For most of his now seven year spell at the Msimbazi Street side's den he has mostly been

The highly rated versatile player had a difficult game and was responsible for Mtibwa Sugar's goal. He was outpaced by Awadh Juma and could not watch as the ball was tucked past keeper Beno Kakolanya. Coming from an injury lay off, it is clear Nyoni is lacking match fitness and has been badly exposed in the Mapinduzi Cup tournament.

Perhaps Nyoni was unnecessarily rushed back to the pitch. Simba have an abundance of centre backs at their disposal. Paschal Wawa, Kennedy Juma, Tyrone Santos, Yusuph Mlipili, and Gerson Fraga were available for the coach he warranties more game selection.

Queen agrees to let Harry, Meghan move part time to Canada

SANDRINGHAM, England

BRITAIN's pragmatic queen brokered a deal Monday to secure the future of the monarchy, charting a course for Prince Harry and his wife, Meghan, that allows them to live part time in Canada while still remaining firmly tied to the House of Windsor.

The decision followed a summit at Queen Elizabeth II's Sandringham estate in eastern England that sought to resolve the conundrum of what to do with royals who only want the job part time. The British monarch said in a statement that the summit of senior royals was "constructive," and that it had been "agreed that there will be a period of transition to sort things out during which Meghan and Harry will spend time in both Canada and the

"My family and I are entirely supportive of Harry and Meghan's desire to create a new life as a young family, the queen said in a statement that offered a demonstrably soft tone. "Although we would have preferred them to remain full-time working members of the Royal Family, we respect and understand their wish to live a more independent life as a family while remaining a valued part of my family.

Royal statements are usually sticklers for protocol, but the queen referred to "my grandson and his family" and "Harry and Meghan" rather than using the couple's formal title, Duke and Duchess of Sussex.

The summit marked the first faceto-face talks with Harry since he and Meghan unveiled their controversial wish last week to step back from their royal roles, become financially independent and split their time between Britain and North America. The meeting reflected the queen's desire to contain the fallout from the independence announcement, which prompted hurt feelings among senior family members not told in advance of the decision.

But by midday Monday, the House of Windsor showed signs of pulling together. Princes William and Harry issued a joint statement slamming a newspaper report describing a severe strain in their relationship, calling the story offensive and potentially

Though the statement did not name the newspaper, the Times of London has a front page story about the crisis in which a source alleged that Harry and Meghan had been pushed away by the "bullying attitude" from William. The joint statement insisted that the story was "false.

"For brothers who care so deeply about the issues surrounding mental health, the use of inflammatory language in this way is offensive and potentially harmful," the statement The queen said after Monday's meeting that these were "complex matters for my family to resolve, and there is some more work to be done, but I have asked for final decisions to be reached in the coming days."

One of the trickier questions that needs to be worked out is precisely what it means for a royal to be financially independent and what activities can be undertaken to make money. Other royals who have ventured into the world of commerce have found it complicated.

Sophie, the countess of Wessex, sought to keep her public relations firm going after her marriage to the queen's third son, Prince Edward, only to find herself embroiled in controversy when she was tricked by the "Fake Sheikh" – an undercover reporter offering a lucrative contract for her firm.

Sophie hinted that if the "sheikh" paid for the firm's services he would get greater publicity because of her royal role. In the end, both Sophie and Edward, who ran a television company, gave up their businesses to become full-time royals in 2002.

Prince Andrew, who was a UK trade envoy, has faced heated questions about his relationship with the late convicted sex offender and financier, Jeffrey Epstein, whom Andrew has said was beneficial to making useful contacts. The queen's second son has relinquished royal duties and patronages after being accused by a woman who says she was an Epstein trafficking victim who slept with the

Harry and Meghan also face questions about paying for security, which is currently taxpayer-funded. Home Secretary Priti Patel refused to comment, but said safety was a priority and added that "royal family themselves need some time and space for them to work through the current issues that they're dealing with."

Meghan, who is American, has longstanding ties to Canada, having lived in Toronto while filming the popular TV series, "Suits." On Friday, she returned to Canada, where the couple and 8-month-old Archie spent a six-week holiday break out of the research associate at University College London's Constitution Unit. said that the crux of the matter lies in the difference between being a celebrity and having royal status.

"Royal status sets you apart, it gives you special role in our society, he said. "It is very difficult for you to put the hat on and take it off. You cannot be half royal or royal part of the time. You can switch it off and on, and it seems to me the royal identity would always be the dominant one."

Some of the challenges are enshrined in the law devised some 20 years ago after an inquiry that followed Sophie's, brush with the fake sheikh. The rules are aimed at ensuring working royals do not exploit their status to profit in business.

Under the guidelines, the royals must consult the most senior member of the royal household before taking on a business activity - a measure that would encroach on Harry and Meghan's independence.

Last week's statement by the couple, who are also known as the Duke and Duchess of Sussex, pushed the issue out into the open and touched off a royal crisis. Tom Bradby, a TV journalist who is close to Harry and Meghan, warned in the Sunday Times that the royal family badly needed a peace deal to prevent "a protracted war" that could damage the monarchy.

"I have some idea of what might be aired in a full, no-holds-barred, sit-down interview (by Harry and Meghan) and I don't think it would be pretty," he wrote in the Sunday Times.

With much at stake, the queen's decision safeguarded the peace – for now. Royal expert Penny Junor said it was vital for the stability of the royal family to keep Meghan and Harry

"What is absolutely imperative, in my view, is that Harry and Meghan do not go away feeling angry and hurt and rejected, because an angry, hurt, rejected Harry and Meghan could cause absolute havoc for the royal family, she said. "If they don't care anymore, if they want to show them, if they want to get their own back, it could get very nasty. They could go completely rogue."

Why doesn't Aguero get the recognition he deserves?

ENJOY Sergio Aguero while you can. The Manchester City striker's contract at the Etihad expires in the summer of 2021 and, if the Argentine sticks to his oft-stated plan of returning to boyhood club Independiente when it runs out, we will only have another seasonand-a-half to appreciate his brilliance.

Aguero's status as one of the best strikers in the world is without question. For more than a decade, the 31-year-old has torn defences apart with Atletico Madrid and Manchester City, both domestically and in the Champions League.

He can do the routine and the spectacular, equally capable of beating a goalkeeper from 30 yards as tapping one in, inches from the goal-line. He also scores "heavy" goals too -- the professional parlance for big goals in big games -- and his title-winning strike for City against Queens Park Rangers in 2012, when he scored in the fourth minute of stoppage time to win the league for his club, is as memorable and iconic as it gets.

But after Aguero eclipsed Arsenal legend Thierry Henry on Sunday by becoming the highestscoring non-English player in Premier League history, it is fair to question whether he gets the acclaim and recognition that he truly deserves.

Aguero went into Sunday's 6-1 victory against Aston Villa at Villa Park with an identical record to Henry, having scored 174 goals in 254 Premier League games. His hat-trick against Villa took him to 177 in 255, moving him level with Chelsea boss Frank Lampard in fourth position on the list of the Premier League's all-time top scorers, and he also went past Alan Shearer in the all-time hat trick count by scoring his 12th against Dean Smith's team.

Even if Aguero has just one-anda-half seasons left in England, you would expect him to surpass Lampard and Andy Cole (187 goals) in Etihad. United, Liverpool and Arthird place and become only the senal are much bigger clubs on a third player to break the 200-goal barrier in the Premier League behind Shearer (260) and Wayne Rooney (208).

Yet while Aguero is rightly lauded as a legendary figure by City supporters, is he under-appreciated by fans elsewhere? He was only named on the PFA Premier League Team of the Year for the first time in 2018, despite arriving at the club in 2011! And when the question is asked about the best, or most influential, foreign player to play in the Premier League, the same old names are often thrown

Henry is an obvious contender, having been a dominant force for Arsenal before, during and after their Invincible season in 2003-04; Eric Cantona also gets a regular mention because of the transformative effect he had on

By Mark Ogden, Senior Writer, ESPN FC Manchester United during the 1990s following his arrival from Leeds in November 1992; Chelsea fans will always hail Gianfranco Zola's impact at Stamford Bridge; while it won't take long before Virgil van Dijk and Mohamed Salah are elevated to similar status at Liverpool.

But Aguero always seems to slip under the radar, despite his incredible record at City since arriving from Atletico Madrid nine years ago. He has now scored more goals than Henry and has won twice as many Premier League titles as the Frenchman (4-2 in Aguero's favour).

Cantona won as many titles as Aguero and more FA Cups -- and the passage of time since he retired in 1997 has perhaps diminished memories of his contribution -- but he was never as consistent in front of goal as the City man and his performances in the Champions League did not come close to the standards set by

Despite scoring some great goals and helping to change the mentality at Chelsea, Zola never won a Premier League title during his time in England and, while Van Dijk and Salah are likely to do that this season at Liverpool, they cannot come close to matching Aguero in terms of his longevity.

Aguero has broken the 20-goal barrier in six of his eight full seasons at City and he already has 13 this time around, so that gives you an idea of his consistency at the very highest level. But perhaps Aguero's low-key persona is a reason for his failure to claim the recognition he deserves.

Nine years after arriving in England, he remains uncomfortable speaking publicly in English, so has been unable to connect with supporters and a wider audience in the same way that the articulate and outspoken Henry did at Aguero does not seek publicity or use the media to his advantage and playing for City has also impacted on his status beyond the global scale than City and command far greater media attention. They also have far deeper reservoirs of supporters who help raise the profile of their star players.

If Aguero had spent his Premier League career playing in red, he would almost certainly be held in the same regard as Henry and Cantona. But whatever the reason for his lack of true recognition, Aguero's record speaks for itself and he will continue to score goals for City until the day he packs his bags for Argentina.

The modern-day pretenders to his crown as the best striker in the league -- Salah, Roberto Firmino, Sadio Mane and Harry Kane -need to do it as consistently, and win as many trophies, as Aguero before they can even come close to challenging his status as the best of the best.

The way Barca dismissed Valverde is indefensible

By Graham Hunter, ESPN Spain writer

WHEN he left Barcelona's training ground for the last time as the club's manager before his dismissal on Monday, Ernesto Valverde noticeably wore a big, happy smile, and he raised a hand to wave somewhat ironically at the gathered media scrum. Why the smile? Well, perhaps because Valverde is a tough, pragmatic man.

Firstly, there couldn't have been an iota of surprise, at least at Barca president Josep Bartomeu's

The humiliating manner of the club chasing one new coach after another in the past few days -- via which Barca signalled that they'd given up on their manager while his team is top of the League, facing a weak Napoli in the Champions League and awaiting a first opponent in the Copa del Rey -- was so pathetic, so ridiculous, that perhaps it may have surprised Valverde. But the 55-year-old Basque must have been counting the days until Bartomeu fully pulled the carpet from underneath him.

Now, just for a second, those who claim that following Barcelona's dreadful display at Anfield in last year's Champions League semifinals and the subsequent disappointment of losing the Copa del Rey final to Valencia, there might have been a natural and well-timed break between the club and their manager probably have a good case. But Barcelona didn't do that. Either they thought they knew better, or they were playing a "we'll do what suits us for the moment" game, which has now backfired and left them with egg on their face.

So, back to the point. Barcelona kept this man on, and they invested in the squad to the tune of more than 200 million euros, but I swear to you that Valverde will have been perfectly clear that his continuity was hanging by a thread. Why? For two reasons.

Firstly, the away performances -- in both La Liga and the Champions League -- this season have not only continued a theme that has dogged Barcelona in Europe for several years now, they've worsened. Irrespective of their statistical positions right now, the trajectory was downward.

Secondly, Valverde is far from a stupid man, and only a stupid man would have failed to recall how Bartomeu does his business: in a knee-jerk and brutal manner when he sees fit.

For example, this is the man who was vicepresident and consigliere to the regime when Eric Abidal, having been publicly promised he'd get a new contract the moment he was back ready to play after a liver transplant to beat cancer, was then unceremoniously shown the door as soon as he won his battle and got fit. This is also the man who sacked his director of football, Andoni Zubizarreta, halfway through a season in which his Zubizarretaassembled squad would go on to win a glorious Treble culminating in the 3-1 Champions League final victory over Juventus.

Zubizarreta's crime? In 2014, when the Camp Nou crowd booed the giant screen upon which mem- Txingurri" or not -- the problems run far, bers of the Barca board were congratulating Lionel far deeper than who is coach. Messi on scoring his 253rd La Liga goal, which made him the all-time top scorer in that competition, Bartomeu needed a sacrificial lamb so he could convince himself and the media that it was not he who was being booed. So, out with the Zubi-goose who had laid the golden eggs -- in fact, half a dozen of Valverde knew precisely what would happen when the chips were down.

When he took over, he was told he'd have Neymar alongside Messi and Luis Suarez. Before Valverde's feet were properly under the table, he discovered that Bartomeu and his board had been vastly complacent, that Neymar was not only keen to leave, but that his buyout clause was well within Paris Saint-Germain's reach.

When Valverde pointed out, a year ago, that he was going to need extra goals in the January market, he suggested signing Carlos Vela -- who would go on to score for fun in MLS, looking his fittest and most athletic for years. Instead, he was given Kevin-Prince Boateng -- heavy, disenchanted with football and slower than every La Liga defender.

Enough context. This guy has had to exist in a deeply flawed Camp Nou environment.

Valverde has a superb trophy record and an exemplary win ratio in his three seasons, and he leaves in the same manner as Pep Guardiola, Tata Martino and Luis Enrique: significantly burned out, pretty disenchanted and acutely aware of the poisoned chalice nature of managing Barcelona.

He's the first manager Barca have sacked midseason since Louis van Gaal in January 2003. I was at that goodbye news conference, and the tough, arrogant Dutchman cried. His lip quivered as he stated, over and again, "I'm still the right man to coach Barcelona, I'm still the right guy," then he started to cry -- just a little. It was far from the resigned, almost relieved, smile that split Valverde's face as he drove away from the Ciutat Esportiva Joan Gamper on Monday.

He and his agent stood firm on details when Barcelona began to rescind his contract. The pair wanted not just every penny that was due to them, but they, legitimately, wanted Barcelona to feel some of the discomfort he'd felt since news broke that the club had not only offered his job to Xavi, but then to Ronald Koeman and, before Quique Setien, they'd explored the idea of appointing Mauricio "I'd rather go back and work on my farm than coach Barcelona" Pochettino to replace him.

The club handled the whole business with all the aplomb of a fisherman juggling a wet salmon with one hand tied behind his back. Truly, they did. These themes are about the class, the timing, the foresight, the logic and the dignity of what has happened since a team -- one that is top of La Liga, likely to reach the Champions League quarterfinal at least, and has scored 34 goals in nine home games -- lost a ding-dong battle in the Spanish Supercopa semifinal to Atletico Madrid after, frankly, one of the best performances of their season.

Valverde, like any employee, can be sacked. Fine. But the manner has been inept.

There were sufficient clues in the performances at Athletic Bilbao, at Levante, at Granada, in Prague and in Dortmund that the chronic problems Barcelona showed in heavy European defeats at PSG, at Juve, at Roma and in Liverpool were getting worse. Not all those European humiliations were under Valverde, please note. Whatever Valverde was doing right or wrong -- whether hard-line Barcelona fans, committed to their core to the idea of playing football in the image of Johan Cruyff and Pep Guardiola, were sick of "El

And beyond being the last La Liga coach to win away at Camp Nou, when Real Betis imposed themselves 4-3 in November 2018, Setien is a self-declared, proven evangelistic disciple of Cruyff's footballing principles. But that didn't stop Bartomeu from ignoring him until at least three others had already refused to take over midseason. Nor is it enough.

Anyone who has read my thoughts on football or listened to my broadcasting nosed, success-saturated squad to work most) said: "All the best, mate."

will know that I adored Cruyff, met him, talked football with him and still think that his concepts are the most intelligent, the most beautiful in the sport we all love. However, the answer to Barcelona's ailments run far deeper than bringing in a devotee of the greatest thinker the club has ever had the privilege of employing.

What the incoming coach has to do, for Cruyff's ideas to become relevant, is to reconvince the players. Not of Cruyff's footballing concepts, but the cost of applying them.

Positional football takes discipline and patience, two traits noticeably lacking from Barca for months. Losing the ball is a crime that fundamentally requires lightning-fast minds, reactions and superb recuperative athleticism. Does that sound like this ageing Barcelona to you? Pressing takes a greater level of fitness, stamina and belief than this squad is -- now and for the longest time -- capable of.

Setien and Cruyff, requires constant mosphere around the team, there is time movement to create three or four passing for this decision to pay off in the way of a options, every single moment that the ball is at the feet of a Barcelona player. Right now, anyone blaming Valverde exclusively for a decline in Cruyffian football at Barcelona either doesn't know what it means or they haven't been paying attention.

Setien has a huge task on his hands. Whether he can answer these three questions in the affirmative will be vital to his success: 1) Can he convince this hard-harder, to train more intensely every single day? If not, then asking them to play pure Cruyff football is foolhardy. 2) Can he convince them that their current mood, "We'll play our way out of trouble" isn't sufficient? 3) Can he get through to Messi and explain to him that even a genius needs a higher work rate and degree of alertness on the pitch than he's been showing since November?

Setien's arrival should, in principle, benefit players such as Arthur, Frenkie de Jong, Marc-Andre ter Stegen, Gerard Pique and Ivan Rakitic. And so long as his form is good, Sergio Busquets won't be dropped for every away game as had begun to be Statistically, Barcelona are in a good position in terms of La Liga and the Champions League. Perhaps of more importance, they still possess proud, ultra-skilled, tough-minded players.

If, and this is a big "if," Setien and his Possession football, as imagined by staff manage to electrify the stultified attrophy or trophies. But that doesn't justify the pig-awful way this business has been handled. Nor will it be rewarded simply because Setien has a profile and a philosophy that dovetails nicely with the Cruyffist past of this club.

> He has an utterly enormous job to get through to his players, to completely revamp their habits and to convince and inspire. As the Cruyff Twitter account (al-

Barcelona knock Real Madrid off top of Money League

LONDON

BARCELONA have overtaken Real Madrid to top the Deloitte Football Money League for the first time and become the first club to break the 800 million euros (686 million pounds) revenue barrier.

The 23rd edition of the table shows an 11% rise in combined revenues, excluding transfer fees, for the top 20 clubs who between them enjoyed turnovers of a record 9.3 billion euros for the 2018-19 season.

Real Madrid have dropped to second, generating income of 757.3 million euros, while Manchester United remain third. Arsenal have slipped out of the top 10 or the first time.

Barcelona's rise to the top with income of 840 million euros is a clear sign of 'a club adapting to changing market conditions' by bringing merchandising and licensing activities in-house, according to Dan Jones, partner in the Sports Business Group at Deloitte.

"Barca have reduced the reliance on broadcast revenue and focussing on tal's highest revenue generating club growing revenues within it's control," he said. "With the club expecting further growth of 30 million euros in commercial revenues and total revenue of almost 880 million in 2019-20 we expect them to retain the top spot next year.

"Barca are on course to achieve its stated ambition to be the first one billion Money League club in years to come." Bayern Munich remain in fourth position with Paris St Germain entering the top five ahead of Manchester City.

Champions League winners Liverpool are seventh, one place ahead of Tottenham Hotspur who they beat in the final. Tottenham's 521.1 million euros income pushes them ahead of Chelsea and Arsenal, making them the capifor the first time since 1996-97.

Once again the Premier League's evewatering television broadcast deals have enables it to dominate the Money League with eight clubs inside the top Spain's La Liga has three and the Bundesliga have three while Serie A has four but Juventus are the highest-placed in 10th. Napoli have moved into the top 20. Juventus' revenue increased 17% to 459.7 million euros, helped by the arrival of talismanic Portuguese forward Cristiano Ronaldo.

Dar pool player falters in Chinese Pool Masters Grand Finals

By Correspondent Joseph Mchekadona

TANZANIAN, Boniface Ndemwa, who represented the country at the just ended World Chinese Pool Masters Grand Finals, has lamented the lack of time for preparations for the competition which was held in Qinhuangdao, North China's Hebei Province.

The event, which is popularly known as Chinese Eight Ball, attracted 136 players from 32 global competition zones and Ndemwa emerged 64th.

Following the results, Ndemwa, a disabled athlete who competed with able bodied athletes, did not get any monetary award.

The event's organizers only paid for his accommodation and air ticket to and from China.

Speaking yesterday, the athlete frowned at the level of his preparations, terming it as poor.

Ndemwa pointed out he, thus, could not compete well with other players.

"To be honest the competition was very tough as all players were well prepared, my main problem was that I did not prepare well," he said.

"I did not have enough time to prepare as you know I'm a family man, when my fellow players from other nations were busy preparing, I was busy looking for money for my family upkeep," he said.

He, however, said he is confident that next time he will perform well, if he will have adequate prepara-

VPL title contenders Yanga, Azam FC eye home wins

By Correspondent Michael Mwebe

THE 2019/20 Vodacom Premier League action will continue today with two matches taking place.

Title contenders, Young Africans (Yanga) and Azam FC will be in action as they look to close down the gap on leaders Simba.

The two teams are coming into these league encounters having both been eliminated in the semi-finals of the 2020 Mapinduzi Cup, held in Zanzibar.

At Uhuru Stadium, Yanga will welcome a wounded Kagera Sugar side that has gone five league matches without a win after they were beaten 2-1 by host Police Tanzania last week.

After watching from the stands as Yanga battled Mtibwa Sugar in the 2020 Mapinduzi Cup semi-final match, the former's newly appointed head coach Luc Eymael is expected to take charge for the first time.

The Belgian has been handed an 18-month contract as the permanent successor to Congolese Mwinyi Zahera, who was sacked in November after a poor start in the league.

While a fourth consecutive loss would put coach Kagera Sugar head coach Mecky Mexime on the spot, it will be interesting to see Yusuph Mhilu turn his sword against his former employers.

Mhilu, a former Yanga striker, now plies his trade with Kagera Sugar and is expected to lead the latter's attacks.

His six goals so far in the competition are only bettered by Simba's Meddie Kagere (10) and Lipuli FC's duo of Paul Nonga (eight) and Daruweshi Saliboko (seven).

In head-to-head stats, Yanga and Kagera Sugar have met in 18 league matches since Yanga have claimed 15 wins compared to three for Kagera Sugar.

The Green and Yellow side has won all of their nine home league matches against Kagera Sugar.

Meanwhile, Azam will host Lipuli FC in a late kick off at the National Stadium. Azam who could go third in the log with a victory will take comfort in the fact that their visitors from Iringa have not won in the last six away matches

Iddi Selemani and Obrey Chirwa will be the key players for Azam while the visitors will rely on Paul Nonga and Darweshi Saliboko who have 15 league goals between

In head-to-head stats, Azam and Lipuli FC have met in 4 league matches since 2017/18.

The ice cream makers have claimed one win while three matches have been drawn.

Kagera Sugar ready for Yanga, says coach

By Correspondent Joseph Mchekadona

KAGERA Sugar head coach Mecky Maxime said his side is ready for today's Vodacom Premier League encounter with Young Africans (Yanga), which will be played at Uhuru Stadium in Dar es Salaam.

Mexime whose side is coming from 2-1 defeat in the hands of Polisi Tanzania said they have prepared well for the game against Yanga as the aim is to collect maximum points.

He said he knows that playing Yanga at Uhuru Stadium will not be easy but they are prepared for the challenge.

He acknowledges that in Yanga, they will face a side that is resilient and aggressive defensively and offensively.

"Everybody in our team is now fresh both physically and psychologically, we have put the last week results behind us and the focus now is on tomorrow (today's) game against Yanga," he insisted.

"It will not be easy but we are ready for them, they are good and are made up of experienced and upcoming players but we will contain them," he disclosed.

Kagera Sugar sit on eighth spot in the league table with 24 points from 12 games while Yanga have 25 points from 12 points and they are on placed seventh in the 20-team league.

The Bukoba-based side who depend on experienced players like Kelvin Sabato, Edward Christopher and Juma Nyoso, have had poor form in the recent Premier League games as they lost 1-0 to Coastal Union and conceded 2-1 defeat to Ruvu Shooting.

They then posted goal less draw with Ndanda and lost 3-1 to Mtibwa

On the other hand, today's game will be the first assignment for Yanga's Belgian head coach Luc Eymael and the outfit's information officer, Hassan Bumbuli, said he is optimistic his side can claim all three points today.

"Recently, our performance in the league has been good and the morale and confidence levels of the players is very high," Bumbuli said.

"I'm sure they will play well so they can show our new coach how good they are... our previous results are giving us confidence that if we can play the way we did we can obviously carry the day," he said.

The Jangwani Street based side was knocked out of the semi-finals of the just ended Mapinduzi Cup by Mtibwa Sugar on post-match penalties.

Yanga, though, have full confidence after their 2-2 draw against their rivals, Simba, in the Premier League.

Before playing Simba, Yanga beat Biashara United1-0, the latter as well edged Prisons 1-0.

Yanga had also settled for barren draw with Mbeya City FC, they notched 1-1 one all draw with KMC FC and beat Alliance FC 2-1.

Yanga's fine run in the Premier League is mainly due to the players which the club has.

The squad has Balama Mapinduzi, Patrick Sibomana, Mrisho Ngassa, Kelvin Yondani and Deus Kaseke who can dictate the match's proceedings and bring the desired results to their club.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the club's information officer has placed his hopes on them.

"These guys have vast experience. Owing to our past glories, I believe they will drive the team to another success, and for sure Kagera will have difficulties in beating us, I'm not underrating them, they are a good side but we will beat them," he said.

Everybody in our team is now fresh both physically and psychologically, we have put the last week results behind us and the focus now is on tomorrow (today's) game against
